French, Italian Fleets Reported in Big Battle; Fighting Goes On as Duce Speeds to Fuehrer; U. S. Warns Axis, Plans Record-Breaking Navy

Measure for 84 New Warships Is Presented to House, Senate

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Administration and Congress met the grave international situation yesterday with plans for the biggest navy in world history and a blunt warning against any attempted seizure of Allied possessions in the New World.

Legislation authorizing 84 new warships, to cost an estimated $1,200,000,000, was presented in the Senate and House in an effort to build American sea power to a strength sufficient to meet attacks in both the Atlantic and Pacific.

The measure would enlarge the fleet by an additional 23 per cent over and above an 11 per cent increase already approved by Congress and signed by President Roosevelt yesterday. The proposed measure would give the Nation an armada of 618 fighting ships.

Warning on Hemisphere

At the same time the Senate passed, 76 to 0, a resolution declaring the United States would oppose any transfer of territory in the Western Hemisphere from one non-American nation to another. While not mentioning Germany or Italy, the measure is intended to serve notice that we will not permit them to take possession of any British, French or Netherlands soil in the Americas.

The measure—which, in effect, writes the Monroe Doctrine into the law of the land—will be taken up in the House today. Passage is assured.

Day's Developments

The day brought these other defense and foreign policy developments:

To speed up delivery of warplanes to the British, the Administration amended existing neutrality regulations so as to enable American pilots to fly planes from factories to Canadian delivery points.

The British notified Secretary Morgenthau they will take over warplanes the French government has on order in the United States, said to number about 3,280, and President Roosevelt acted to "freeze" French assets here, estimated to total over $1,000,000,000.

The House, unanimously and without debate, passed legislation authorizing an increase in the Army enlisted strength from 280,000 to 400,000. Funds to expand the Army immediately to 375,000 men have already been voted by the House.

Economic Defense

Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, proposed a seven-point program to speed American armament, which would make the President a virtual dictator.

The Administration proposed a billion dollar plan for the economic defense of the Western

Yell and Dash From Two Bandits Saves $1,000

Agility and lusty lungs yesterday saved $1,000 from a pair of suspected bandits.

Lorenz Mills, 22, of 1207 Park road northwest, had collected the week-end receipts from two stores in the chain for which he works and was bound for the Riggs Bank branch at Fourteenth street and Park road when it happened. Just leaving the second store, at Eleventh and Kenyon streets, he saw two men walking toward him from the other side. One caught his arm and muttered "Wait."

Mills did everything but. He emitted a yell and dashed back into the store he had just left. He and the manager, Robert Pope, emerged in time to see the two men leap to the side of a moving automobile.

The War Today

French Armies Crumbling Slowly Under Nazi Hammer

FRANCE'S BROKEN ARMIES "still are fighting with the same bravery for the honor of the flag" while aged Premier-Marshal Petain awaits Fuehrer Hitler's terms of an "honorable" peace. One of these armies—300,000 men—was reported to have escaped from the Maginot Line into the Rhone Valley, but the others were swiftly collapsing.

HITLER AND PREMIER MUSSOLINI are meeting to decide the extent of their demands, after Germany's armies smashed across the Loire at Orleans, drove to the Swiss border to cut off Alsace and Lorraine—and Italian armies still stood idle.

BRITAIN'S PRIME MINISTER broadcast the empire's determination to fight on, and London disclosed France had been invited to unite with Britain—an offer which might be renewed if France rejects the Axis terms.

FATE OF FRANCE'S FLEET, which with Italy's and Germany's would almost match Britain's for an invasion of England, was a key position. Possible answer came in unconfirmed reports of a major engagement between French and Italian navies, its outcome yet unknown.

TURKEY TURNED TO RUSSIA for protection, as Russia completed her Baltic occupations and was rumored to be threatening Rumania's Bessarabia.

BRITAIN AGAIN HAMMERED Italy's African air bases, claiming destruction of 100 planes, and reported capture of 600 Italian troops on the Libyan border.

U. S. Prepares For Economic War With Nazis

Billion-Dollar Cartel Considered to Control Hemisphere Trade

The United States moved in striking fashion yesterday to consolidate the foreign trade of the entire Western Hemisphere, and thereby seek to block further Nazi economic and political penetration in Latin America.

On instructions from President Roosevelt, four Cabinet officials set to work drafting into concrete form a proposal for a billion-dollar-a-year cartel, financed by the United States, to buy up surplus products of the 21 American republics and dispose of them in the world markets on the best terms obtainable in gigantic bargaining operations.

The proposal came in the midst of repeated official warnings that something more concrete than espousal of good-neighborliness is essential to combat Hitlerian inroads in the New World's Latin lands. Urgent suggestions that a resources and defense committee be set up to solidify the Northern and Southern continents against totalitarian threats have increased.

The cartel plan is designed to meet the challenge from the south that until the United States will buy more of the surplus products of the Latin-Americans they are forced to deal with Germany, even by barter, or any other prospective purchaser.

The Secretaries of State, Agriculture and Commerce and a representative of the Secretary of the Treasury met for an hour and a half yesterday to start drafting the proposal for submission to the Southern Republics. They will continue the work at another meeting.

Officials said that the plan under discussion would set up a cartel

G. O. P. Policy Drafters Scan War for Clews

One Is for 'Plankless' Platform; Unit Headed By 'Borah Isolationist'

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Philadelphia, June 17.—The Republican resolutions committee, so concerned over the international situation that one member proposed a "plankless platform," today sought to find in Europe's war a clew to Republican campaign policy.

Organizing a week in advance of the G. O. P. convention, the group appeared predominantly of Allied sympathies. One Allied aid plank was already prepared for submission.

Yet the committee elected as temporary chairman a "Borah isolationist"—Herbert K. Hyde, Oklahoma City attorney.

Hyde, part Cherokee Indian and a one-time Washington law student, was chosen with the backing of all factions in the party, who insisted his selection had no policy implications.

Candidates Discussed

Previously former Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas, former Senator George Wharton Pepper, of Pennsylvania, and former Senator Walter Edge, of New Jersey—all in favor of Allied help—announced they would not serve as committee head.

Thirty-three of the 43 members-designate met briefly at morning and afternoon sessions and decided to defer actual plank drafting until much later in the week. In the meantime they discussed candidates and war developments.

New York District Attorney Dewey and Senator Taft, of Ohio, continued heavy favorites for the

New York, June 17 (AP).—Two Army bombers collided a half mile above a residential section of Queens today, burst into flames and carried 11 Army fliers to death in the burning wreckage.

Two homes were fired by flaming gasoline but, by what seemed like a miracle, no civilians in the thickly-populated area were killed. One woman was burned.

All aboard the two bombers were killed. Army officers immediately opened an inquiry.

Another mid-air collision, at Tulsa, Okla., cost the lives of two students and an instructor during routine maneuvers. One of the dead was a Government cadet. Two persons on the ground were injured.

The crash here, a few miles west of Mitchel Field, Long Island, Army air post, cost the lives of one commissioned officer and five men holding reserve commissions, and five enlisted men. It happened only a few minutes after the ships took off from Mitchel Field.

Lieut. Paul Burlingame, West Point graduate and native of Louisville, Ky., leading a three-plane "V" formation, had radioed the pilots of the two "wing" planes to change positions, he himself intending to drop back to the left wing, when the collision occurred.

In the maneuver, the plane of Burlingame and the one piloted by Lieut. Richard M. Bylander, of Little Rock, Ark., collided and locked. The third plane flew on.

Churchill Tells Britain Struggle Will Continue Despite France

By the Associated Press

London, June 17.—Great Britain flung into Nazi Germany's teeth tonight the defiant decision to fight on alone—"unconquerable"—from the little island seat of world-wide empire.

Prime Minister Winston Churchill, in a two-minute radio address, said the fight would go on "until the curse of Hitler is lifted from the brows of mankind."

He told his people that they now have become "the sole champions in arms to defend the world cause."

Isle Faces 3 Threats

Speaking for the British empire, he declared:

"The news from France is very bad, and I grieve for the gallant people who have fallen into this terrible misfortune.

"Nothing will alter our feelings toward them or our faith that the genius of France will rise again. What has happened in France makes no difference to British faith and purpose.

"We have become the sole champions now in arms to defend the world cause and we shall do our best to be worthy of this high honor.

"All Will Come Right"

"We shall defend our island home and with the British Empire around us we shall fight on unconquerable until the curse of Hitler is lifted from the brows of mankind. We are sure that in the end all will come right."

He spoke as sorely-afflicted France asked her Nazi conqueror for peace, a development which made it plainer than ever that England herself is menaced by the triple threat of blockade, bombardment and direct invasion from Hitler's legions.

The talk was made at the request of the British press that Churchill give a message to the people of Great Britain and of America.

Churchill will speak in Parliament tomorrow. He is expected to reiterate the British intent to fight until victory has been achieved regardless of the cost or the time.

"Long War" Mentioned Again

Churchill made no mention of the vital issue forthcoming from France's plea for peace—the disposition of the French navy.

With France's fleet hitched to its own to wage long-range naval and economic war on the Axis powers, Britons saw the possibility of a sudden turn back to the conception of "long war."

However, it was considered that the Axis powers might demand the French navy as part of their price for peace. This poses the question of whether the French fleet, under British admiralty command in a deal which gave the French control of the Allied land forces, could actually be surrendered by the French

Berlin Holds Bid Of Petain Is Not Capitulation Or Surrender

By Guido Enderis
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, June 17.—Marshal Petain's broadcast request to the Reich government for terms under which the war can be liquidated constitutes, in the official German opinion, neither capitulation nor a formal request for an armistice.

Fighting along the Loire was still in progress today but it was largely of a sporadic nature—the Germans continuing their advance.

Accompanied by a staff of military, political and legal advisers, Fuehrer Hitler is en route tonight for his meeting with Premier Mussolini, where the Axis leaders will examine the situation and Petain's request as it affects their respective countries, it was announced in an official communique.

May Meet at Brenner

So far as could be learned the Fuehrer and the Duce will meet either in Munich or on the Brenner Pass although official quarters in Berlin up to a late hour tonight stubbornly declined to offer any enlightenment on the meeting.

[The Associated Press interpreted the expression "in western Europe" in the communique announcing the dictator's meeting to mean in Paris, or more likely in Versailles. Hitler, it was believed, would enjoy humbling France in the same spot where the "iniquitous" Treaty of Versailles was written at the end of the World War, and where Bismarck proclaimed the German Empire in 1871.]

Attack on Britain Expected

While the French premier's query is interpreted in German quarters as a request for information, it is nevertheless accepted as an official admission of France's complete military and political collapse.

Pending outcome of tomorrow's meeting between Hitler and Mussolini, neutral speculation converges on the situation confronting England and predictions are to the effect that Hitler will lose no time in coming to final grips with Britain.

Insists on Surrender

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, June 17.—Adolf Hitler's terms at the outset are known to be unconditional capitulation without anything in the nature of a preliminary armistice or negotiations.

No authentic information is available here tonight as to the detailed demands which the Fuehrer and Mussolini will make on France. The prevailing view is that anything like a permanent settlement will be left to the future, and that in dealing with France at their conference, the two dictators will consider only immediate issues, such as the disposal of the French fighting

Prelude to Peace Bid

French Reject British Offer For War Union of Empires

Petain Cabinet Overrules Churchill's Proposal to Pool All Resources Under Single Government to Carry On Conflict

Copyright, 1940, by the United Press.

London, June 19.—France appealed to Germany for peace after rejecting a proposal whereby the British and French empires would have been merged under a single government to carry on the war against Hitlerism, it was revealed tonight.

The French cabinet overruled the British proposal, unique in the history of the world, after Premier Paul Reynaud had argued desperately for its acceptance.

Reynaud resigned, was replaced by Marshal Petain and the plea for an "honorable peace" was sent immediately to Adolf Hitler.

With France engulfed by the German blitzkrieg, British Prime Minister Churchill proposed the merging of the British and French empires under a government composed of representatives of the two nations as the best means of achieving full unity.

The draft of Britain's proposal for "one Franco-British union" provided for new appeals to the United States to rush all economic aid to the Allies and "bring her powerful material aid to the common cause."

Not only would Britain and France have pooled all their fighting strength and resources but every Briton would have become a citizen of France and every Frenchman would have become a British citizen.

Churchill and Reynaud reached a complete agreement on the plan during the week-end when Reynaud sent Gen. Charles de Gaulle to London to confer with Churchill.

The foreign office tonight announced the proposal, called a new "solemn act of union," had been offered to France Sunday through

Duce, Hitler To Map Terms In Munich

Ciano, Badoglio Go With Mussolini To Meet Fuehrer

By the Associated Press

Rome, June 17.—Premier Mussolini left blacked-out Rome tonight on a dimly-lighted train to confer with Adolf Hitler at Munich tomorrow on the joint peace terms they will put before France.

Secrecy surrounded the departure of the private train and few saw the premier leave.

Before taking the train, Mussolini had a long conference with Marshal Pietro Badoglio, chief of the Italian general staff.

[International News Service said Badoglio and German Ambassador von Mackensen accompanied Mussolini.]

3 Months After Brenner

On the train with Mussolini was his son-in-law and foreign minister, Count Ciano, who will be at Mussolini's side when he meets Hitler.

Such a meeting by the two war lords would come exactly three months after their secret two and one-half hour talk in Brenner Pass, on the German-Italian border, which preceded Germany's blitzkrieg on Scandinavia and western Europe.

Italians Jubilant

(In Berlin, there was speculation that Hitler and Mussolini might meet at Versailles, seat of treaties ending the war of 1870 triumphantly for Germany and the World War, when the Reich was beaten.)

Word that the French were suing for peace with Germany caused a flash of jubilation throughout Italy. Thousands of Italians took it as a sign that the war—which they en-

British Move to Take Over Orders Placed For Planes and Arms

Great Britain, facing the grim prospect of Nazi invasion, will purchase all aircraft ordered by France in the United States, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau revealed yesterday as he moved to protect French funds here for their present owners by extending Treasury "freeze" orders to France.

Morgenthau said he had been advised by Arthur B. Purvis, head of the British Purchasing Mission, that London would take all the aircraft and munitions that the French had ordered here.

The transfer of contracts to Britain would involve 3,280 military planes and an unestimated quantity of munitions, it was reported from New York by the Associated Press.

U. S. Could Take Over Contracts

Morgenthau told reporters:

"Under the President's declarations, I would assume that as long as the British want these contracts, we will be glad to let them have them."

The American government, Morgenthau said, would have power to take over the contracts for itself, if the President issued a declaration of a state of emergency. Morgenthau refused to comment when asked if such a declaration was under contemplation.

The Treasury order immobilizing French reserves in this country was believed by officials yesterday to affect upwards of $1,000,000,000 of French funds here. Morgenthau extended to France also the requirement that ship-

BordeauxCabinet Asks 'Honorable Peace' as Price For Yielding

By the Associated Press

Bordeaux, June 17. — The armies of France fought on tonight along the whole confused front after their government asked Adolf Hitler for terms of peace and received no immediate reply.

With what strength of men and munitions was left after 12 days of ceaseless retreat before heavy odds, the exhausted French still defiantly demanded "an honorable peace" as the condition of surrender.

[The French radio said the fleet—fate of which was the source of deep anxiety in Britain—was "intact" and the London Daily Mail reported in a Bordeaux dispatch that the French Mediterranean fleet, under orders of Admiral Jean Darlan, Navy minister since Sunday night, had had a "major engagement" with the Italian fleet.

[It was reported that the Italians suffered heavy losses.

[It appeared possible that the French fleet, surrender of which seemed an inevitable part of the still unknown armistice terms, might have determined on a last desperate effort to help her ally, Britain, by destroying as much as possible of Premier Mussolini's fleet.

[German sources expressed belief, the Associated Press said, that Britain, anticipating France's "dark day," already had "spirited off" much of the French fleet for use in continuing the war on her own.—Editor's note.]

A French night communique said the land fighting still was violent, that French resistance continued, and that there had been no letup in the fierce Nazi onslaught south and east from the River Loire.

Military spokesmen admitted, however, that the front was disorganized and that the Germans had split the French forces into four ribbons.

French Fight On

Hardest fighting was reported in the vicinity of Orleans, along the Loire River, 75 miles south of Paris. (The Germans said they had taken Orleans and crossed the Loire.)

The French communique told of desperate resistance all along the Middle Loire, but said German spearheads still stabbed deeper into France in the region of Dijon and Autun, east of the Loire, 150 to 175 miles southeast of Paris.

The French admitted German mechanized units had pushed into the departments of Doubs and Jura on the Swiss frontier.

"We are ready to lay down arms if we can get honorable peace," declared the new foreign minister, Paul Baudoin.

Insist on Honor

"But we are never ready to accept shameful conditions which mean the end of the spiritual freedom of our people.

"If we are given the choice between resistance and honor, the French army and the whole French people will know what to do."

["It is absolutely untrue to say that France is going to lay down her arms," declared an announcer on the French government radio wave length picked up tonight by N. B. C. in New York.

[France has merely asked Germany under what conditions she would consent to stop the slaughter

Rep. Brewster Defeats Barrows In Senate Race

Portland, Me., June 17 (AP).—Maine Republicans chose Representative Ralph O. Brewster, seeking promotion to the Senate, for the nomination tonight over Gov. Lewis O. Barrows in the State primary.

In 400 of a total of 629 precints the count stood: Brewster, 38,678; Barrows, 27,305.

The Republicans at the same time had renominated the State's first woman Representative, Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith, and renominated Representative James C. Oliver.

A third Congressional fight still was undecided.

In the race for the Republican nomination for Governor, Mayor Frederick G. Payne, of Augusta, held a slight lead over Sumner Sewall, World War ace, in a four-cornered fight.

Louis J. Brann, former two-term Governor, was unopposed for the Democratic nomination, as were other Democrats in the major contests, with one exception. Frederick G. Payne, young mayor of Augusta, was slightly ahead of three closely bunched opponents for the G. O. P. gubernatorial nomination.

Straus Monument Work to Begin On Parking Site

Space now occupied by 200 cars on the Grand Plaza parking lot, behind the District Building, will be cleared tomorrow, when work will be started on a monument to Oscar Straus, first Secretary of Commerce.

The memorial, a figure of Straus, will face the Department of Commerce on the east side of Fourteenth street. It is being erected by the Oscar Straus Memorial Association of New York, under Congressional authorization.

Officials of the parking lot said no transient autos will be accommodated after tomorrow. Persons who have reserved space on the lot will be the only ones permitted to park. The lot holds 1,500 cars.

The area to be cleared is 185 feet long and 128 feet deep along Fourteenth street. The Federal Government will excavate and lay the monument's base. Eggers & Higgins, a New York firm, are the architects.

Saga of Alpine Heroism

Handful of Chasseurs Snatch 300,000 Poilus From Nazi Trap

By the Associated Press

Les Verrjers, Switzerland (at the French border, Tuesday), June 18.—The dramatic battle of the Jura Mountains ended this morning and the Germans' powerful army finally closed the door on its Alsace-Lorraine trap after fighting battle-worn Frenchmen who refused to believe their country has offered to surrender.

By the dogged battle, a few thousand French Alpine Chasseurs had rescued a French army estimated at least at 300,000 Maginot fortress troops who literally were snatched from the trap before the Germans could close it.

The rescue gave the new French foreign minister, Paul Baudoin, military backing for his statement last night that the French would never lay down their arms to accept a peace which was dishonorable.

Most Frenchmen in Switzerland said they believed the Nazi demands on France would permit an "honorable" peace, but that Baudoin's words were directed mainly at Premier Mussolini.

They believed old Marshal Petain would consider Italian demands for Corsica, Savoy and Nice "dishonorable" peace terms, and that the veteran of Verdun and his army and people might fight on, in spite of desperately deadly odds, rather than submit to such terms.

The 300,000 whose rescue yesterday places such a last-ditch fight within the realm of military pos-

TROJAN DONKEYS: Best epigram of the day: It isn't fair to call every anti-Ally ostrich a Trojan Horse. Some are merely Trojan donkeys.

NO PHONE CHAT: Officials at the State Dept. and White House deny, with an indulgent smile, that there was any phone talk between Roosevelt and Mussolini as FDR tried to quench Benito's coyote war ardors.

FDR and Benito the Brave couldn't swap ideas on the weather in their respective, frail Italian and English . . . Their message went through diplomatic channels, via Hull and Ciano, the ambassadors Phillips and Colonna, and Sumner Welles.

FAVORITE PHRASE: As the buzz of talk about credit for the Allies begins, the phrase you hear oftenest on Capitol Hill is:

"First lift the mortgage on the Western hemisphere."

This means that Britain and France should spend their holdings on this side of the Atlantic, especially shares in American business, before we begin to lend. To most Americans it sounds not unreasonable, at that.

"—big enough for Mars"

SOCKS FOR MARS: Once again the b. w. is knitting socks for soldiers, as she did during the first World War as a little girl. This time her 9-year-old b. g. is knitting, too, along with thousands of other women in the Capital.

With two pages of mimeographed instructions to guide them around the turn at the heel, they are knitting some gigantic socks almost two feet long, which seem big enough for the god of war himself.

But they are for the men on the mine sweepers, destroyers and in the trenches to wear next winter—if there is a next winter in this war . . . Probably a machine could outknit them 1,000 to 1.

It isn't the socks that count, though; it's the knitting. Psychologically there is nothing that arouses and stimulates the prodemocracy sentiments and affections of American women so much as to be knitting for the French and British. Short of war? Not after 10,000 stitches!

Candidly, it is propaganda of the subtlest sort . . . As a woman knits a size 15 sock and listens to the radio bulletins, she is stirred emotionally much as if she were knitting tiny garments for a baby of her own who will some day be imperiled and embattled, too.

"Al yearns for vindication"

CAPONE'S BOOK: Not so long ago the FBI heard Capone was eager to write a book, and sent an agent to chat with him about it. He had in mind, it developed, a book to paint himself as a sort of big, good-natured, modern Robin Hood who didn't mean any harm.

"I want to compare myself with some of the rich big shots who got away with it," he said, "but who did more evil and less good than I did."

The FBI man meditated a moment.

"Of course," he said, "a lot of people might not believe you."

Capone chewed on that a while.

"Maybe you're right," he said.

So far he hasn't begun the book.

WHERE WAS CASSANDRA? Some of the best delvers in town are trying to dig up, out of the Congressional Record and elsewhere, old speeches to prove that they warned Roosevelt years ago that he ought to have thousands of planes and tanks a-building.

Alas, some statesmen who are convinced they said it simply can't find any quotable quotes. There are denunciations of small armament programs in the record, but it's naked of demands for large ones.

OCTOBER PLANES: Meanwhile, some of the Capital's sages are gradually focusing on a solemn thought: Unless the Roosevelt regime can be turning out new planes and tanks in large numbers by October, the Republicans may have a chance to win in November.

nomination in the lobby talk, with the spectacular rise of Wendell L. Willkie the potential upsetting factor.

Little love is being shown for Willkie in either the Taft or Dewey camps, and in nervousness over his sudden rise a "stop Willkie" movemetn appears to be shaping.

A Taft-Dewey deal has even quietly been discussed sub rosa as a "not fantastic" possibility, although who would take first place and who second is the delicate question that would probably bar such a deal. Both Dewey and Taft have professed no Vice Presidential aspirations.

Hyde's selection as resolutions chairman was made strictly a temporary choice, with a permanent head to be designated after the committee is officially accredited by the convention. Olin G. Saxon, professor of economics at Yale, and one of Landon's 1936 advisers, was elected secretary. The group tomorrow will hear Dr. Glenn Frank and key members of his Republican program committee and Wednesday has been set aside for open hearings.

Dominating interest in the international situation was shown when the overwhelming majority of members polled by the chairman expressed a desire to serve on the Foreign Affairs and National Defense subcommittee—one of eight plank-drafting groups to be set up.

Edge, former Ambassador to France, who favors assistance to the Allies "short of sending troops," is being mentioned for chairman of the Foreign Affairs subcommittee. Edge told reporters America should do everything possible to help Britain and France, "and if France goes down, then we should continue to offer material help to England."

"This is not altruism; it is a matter of self-preservation," he said, disclosing that he already has drawn a plank on the subject.

Former Gov. Landon, in attendance at both meetings, voiced a similar view.

"I favor all proper aid to the Allies that does not make any commitments to the Allies that will take us into the war unless the vital interests of Americans are concerned," said Landon.

Landon charged the Roosevelt Administration "has spent billions and is still 25 years behind" in preparedness measures. He said he agreed with Lord Beaverbrook "that we can take a lesson from the folly of the Allies."

Landon urged a "postal card" platform statement "of constructive purposes—intelligent people realize events will shape the details." In the present condition of world affairs, he said no rigid position can be taken on any subject from foreign affairs to the tariff "that will fit in July, much less in November."

British May Force French To Surrender Fleet to Empire

By Edward T. Folliard

Post Staff Writer

The burning question in Washington yesterday was: What will happen to the French fleet?

In Allied circles here it was predicted the British would turn their guns on the French warships and demand their surrender to keep them out of the grasp of Hitler and Mussolini.

It would be a fantastic spectacle, the British turning on their ally of the day before, but a Londoner on duty here saw it as the only solution to a problem of the utmost gravity. For the French fleet, plus the Italian fleet, plus the German fleet would give the Nazi-Fascists an armada approximately as strong as that of Britain.

The French, it was believed here, would put up some kind of a fight against the British, or at least pretend to, in an effort to keep Hitler and Mussolini from taking their wrath out on the French people.

The two dictators probably would rather have the French fleet than all the cities in France.

Since the war began last September, the British and French fleets have cooperated closely. The bulk of the French navy and a good part of the British navy are now in the Mediterranean, and the belief was expressed in British quarters here that Admiral Sir Dudley Pound wasted no time in maneuvering his ships so as to pounce on the French vessels.

The French fleet consists of 7 battleships, 2 aircraft carriers, 7 heavy cruisers, 11 light cruisers, 73 destroyers and 77 submarines.

Under construction or appropriated for are 4 battleships, 2 aircraft carriers, 3 light cruisers, 32 destroyers and 25 submarines.

On May 1 the British strength was 14 battleships of 465,350 tons. The combined tonnage of the Italian and German battle fleets was 276,810 tons. That would give the British almost a two to one superiority. However, if the French battle fleet should be acquired by Hitler and Mussolini, the Axis battle fleet would be increased to 440,755 tons, or to within 25,000 tons of the British.

France to Accept Hitler's Terms

France will accept Hitler's peace terms, even if they call for an unconditional surrender, The Post was informed last night by a source who is in close touch with the new Petain government.

"The terms will not be easy to accept," he said, "but further resistance is absolutely impossible." He added:

"France has lost the major part of her stationary and mobile defenses in the retreat. There are no British troops to speak of on French soil. And it is too late for help from the United States in the form of arms and material—most of the French purchases have not and cannot be shipped in time."

The spokesman said the French are convinced that continuance of the war would mean the destruction of the remainder of France with an unconditional surrender inescapable at the end of the road.

Hemisphere. It envisages the creation of a United States-financed cartel to buy up surpluses of raw materials in other American nations and dispose of them for cash or by barter.

Secretary of War Woodring announced that two additional infantry divisions would be created under the expansion of the Army to 280,000 men, just voted by Congress. The 38,000 additional men also will provide engineering units for the General Headquarters Air Force, trained to construct advance air bases anywhere in the Western Hemisphere. A further increase of 95,000 troops is pending in Congress.

The Senate Naval Affairs Committee approved legislation to speed up naval shipbuilding, by permitting negotiated contracts in place of competitive bidding, advance payment to contractors, and overtime pay for naval workers.

The measure would limit shipbuilding and plane manufacturing profits to 7 per cent. Existing law permits 10 per cent to be earned on ships and 12 per cent on Army and Navy planes.

President Roosevelt signed into law a bill authorizing 10,000 planes, 18,000 pilots and a far-flung chain of air bases for the Navy as he took similar action on the measure providing an 11 per cent increase in the fleet.

The President named a nine-man national defense research committee, composed of leading college presidents and Government experts.

Chairmen Walsh and Vinson of the Senate and House Naval Affairs Committee, who introduced the Administration's new naval bill, said that by spending $50,000,000 on expansion of ship yards, the huge program could be launched immediately and completed by 1944. A deficiency appropriation of $80,000,000 will be asked for this purpose and for starting work on the warships themselves, it was said.

The bill would authorize an additional 399,800 tons of combat ships, giving the United States an overall warship strength of 2,124,080 tons. This would provide a mighty armada of 26 battleships, 14 aircraft carriers, 70 cruisers, 338 destroyers and 170 submarines.

No battleships are provided under the new program, which would emphasize swift cruisers and destroyers, larger and more heavily gunned than existing craft. Chairman Vinson said the bill would provide three aircraft carriers with a total tonnage of 79,500, about 12 cruisers with an aggregate tonnage of 198,000, 41 destroyers totaling 80,100 tons, and 28 submarines totaling 42,000 tons.

The existing fleet consists of 15 battleships, five carriers, 35 cruisers, 219 destroyers and 95 submarines totaling 1,257,360 tons. Building or projected — including ships for which appropriations have been asked—are 10 battleships, six aircraft carriers, 23 cruisers, 78 destroyers and 47 submarines.

Cost of completing this program and the additional ships asked yesterday was officially estimated at $1,926,000,000.

Senate approval of the resolution giving the Monroe Doctrine the force of law, came after Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, urged that warships be sent to Allied possessions in the Caribbean, "not to make war on them but to make sure that war is not made upon them."

Arms for Latins

As the Senate acted, President Roosevelt signed a bill providing for closer cooperation of American republics on defense matters. It would authorize the Army and Navy to assist Latin-American nations expand their military and naval forces and to construct arms for them at cost.

Named to the defense research committee were Dr. J. B. Conant, president of Harvard University; Dr. Richard C. Tolman, of the California Institute of Technology; Dr. Karl Compton, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Conway P. Coe, United States patents commissioner; Dr. F. B. Jewett, president of the National Academy of Sciences; the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. Dr. Vannevar Bush, president of the Carnegie Institution, previously was appointed chairman of the group.

Senator Pepper's seven-point defense program would grant "full war power" to the President; establish universal defense service for young and old; empower the President to suspend all laws and regulations, including the labor standards acts; give the President power to suspend the debt limit as defense needs require; empower the President to send materials and extend credit to countries he considers "America's first line of defense;" authorize Congress and the President to consider larger defense and tax programs; authorize the President to imprison all aliens who might jeopardize the defense program.

Pepper declared that the United States had already "lost South America" to Hitler.

U. S. War Stand Declared Unwise

Charlottesville, Va., June 17.—Lawrence Dennis, author, lecturer and formerly secretary of embassy, United States Diplomatic Service, asserted today that for "us to go to war to recover the lost possessions and prestige of the British, French and Dutch and to reconstitute nations liquidated by the war, would be a challenge to some 400,000,000 dissatisfied and fighting people."

Speaking at the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia where, a week ago, President Roosevelt pledged the Allies the "material resources" of the United States, Dennis said the President had "achieved a type of isolation for this nation which is both unique and unenviable.

Adjustment Necessary

"The problem, as Mr. Roosevelt sees it," he continued, "may be how to make the Allies win, but as I see it, that is now hopeless. The problem for America, as I see it, is how to adjust ourselves to the new conditions or how to get on in the new world that will be remade by the winners of this war.

"We are a nation of 135,000,000 people, inhabiting one of the most favored lands in the world. But we are not and never will be in a position single-handed to lay down the law to 400,000,000 Germans, Italians, Russians and Japanese, fighting peoples whose way and institutions may not suit us.

Sees World Revolt

"We have to recognize that this war is part of a world revolution in which capitalism is going under and national socialism is taking its place. Those who think American democracy can win a war against the totalitarians should recall that during the past ten years it has made absolutely no progress against winning the war on unemployment."

Dr. Brooks Emeny, director of the Foreign Affairs Council, in cooperation with Cleveland College, told the institute that the United States was founded as a refuge from the ever recurring tyrannies and wars of Europe and that it should be kept so, "in the knowledge that, with wisdom and wise leadership, we have the power to ride the storm intact and free."

Defends Administration

Dr. Helen Dwight Reid, lecturer in politics at Bryn Mawr College, in an appraisal of the foreign policy of the Roosevelt Administration, said the "fundamental policies of this Administration form a sound foundation for future policy and should be continued."

Evening speakers were John W. Wheeler Bennett, deputy chairman of the information committee of the British Royal Institute of International Affairs, who viewed Britain's future in defeat or in victory, and Dr. Carl J. Frederich, author and professor of government in Harvard University, whose subject was "The Failure of Democracy in Foreign Affairs."

Russia Speeds Troops and Tanks To New Bases in 3 Baltic Nations

Lithuania, Estonia And Latvia Occupied By Red Army

By the Associated Press

Stockholm, June 17.—Soviet Russia, which won important military concessions from Finland by war, rushed troops and tanks tonight to new Baltic bases seized from Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania by ultimatum.

The full military occupation of the three little nations made them an armed camp for Soviet troops, gave the Russians unchallenged command of the eastern end of the Baltic Sea, and put Red armies close to German frontiers.

There were reports, too, in the Swedish press that Russian soldiers were being concentrated in Soviet eastern Poland.

[In Moscow, the German Ambassador, Count Friedrich Werner von Schulenberg, visited Premier Molotoff tonight.]

Results of the broadening of Russia's armed influence could not be foretold immediately.

Reasons for the moves were given by the Moscow government in three notes to Lithuania, entered by troops troops Saturday, and Latvia and Estonia, occupied at dawn today.

The notes demanded that the countries allow free entry of Soviet troops and reorganize their governments.

Tass, official Soviet news agency, said the government's reasons were that Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia made a military agrement "directed against the U. S. S. R." violated pacts with Russia, held secret conferences, and sought to bring Finland inot a Baltic alliance.

There was no opposition to the steady stream of Soviet soldiers and mechanized equipment that poured in from the east and northeast.

Governments of the three nations were being organized. Russian military authorities were participating in reorganizations.

Tass reported that "former President" Antantas Smetona and other Lithuanian officials fled across the border into Germany and were interned. German sources confirmed this, adding that the Lithuanians were being held at Konigsberg, East Prussia.

The populaces of the countries were described as calm.

The Soviet fleet entered the Bay of Riga, between Latvia and Estonia, and troops occupied military garrisons along the coast and in the principal cities.

The Stockholm newspaper Allehanda reported Berlin reaction to the moves was "rather reserved" and "not exactly welcomed."

The Berlin radio, in an English broadcast heard in London, said:

"Some circles abroad are making idle speculation with regard to Soviet Russia's intentions. All Rumors in this connection are entirely unfounded . . ."

Foreign observers in Stockholm, however, suggested that the consolidation of Russia's position on the Baltic was prompted by a growing concern over Germany's rapid expansion and extension of military influence in Norway and at the western outlet of the Baltic.

In view of Russia's nonaggression pact with Germany, some observers asked whether the moves indicated preparations for a Russian break with Germany, or were a step taken in cooperation with the Nazis in dividing the "spheres of influence" of "new Europe."

Air service and steamer traffic between Helsinki and Estonia were suspended.

Chasseurs Save 300,000 From Trap

Reserves Taken From Line

They were khaki-clad fortress troops of the Lower Alsace Maginot Line, most of whom were under command of Gen. Bessom.

Their last-ditch fight had its eastern end on the modernized fort of Bellegarde, towering high above the Rhone River and known as "Gibraltar of the Rhone."

From there a natural geographical line sprawls along the Rhone and across to Brittany on the coast.

Heer is the story of their rescue and how it was effected by a comparatively small force of reserve artillery units and weary Alpine Chasseurs:

Some time betwen the fall of Paris and the fall of Verdun, the commander of all Maginot troops received orders to send out all available reserves under Gen. Bessom's command.

Two divisions of Alpine Chasseurs also were withdrawn from the Italian front and sent north to reenforce the Verdun sector.

But German motorized units blasted through the French front on the Marne before the chasseurs reached their new positions. Once a break was made the Germans shot an entire Panzer division into the gap, followed by trailblazers whose goal was to close the door on Alsace-Lorraine and the whole Maginot Line.

These reached Dole early Sunday, splitting the Chasseurs' force in two, with less than a division between the Germans and the Jura.

These Alpine troops, already wearied and weakened by the casualties of three days of violent fighting, fell back on little Fresse Mountain, about 30 miles from the Swiss frontier. There they found several batteries of 75s and 101s, manned by reserve artillerymen.

There they stood for 36 hours while behind them moved the Maginot army, by forced marches and in overloaded trucks out of the trap.

Hammered by motorized units, superior arms, superior numbers, and attacked from the air, they stood their ground until last night, when the last of Bessom's forces passed through the gap.

Then the Chausseurs broke, and almost 1,000 haggard, worn men, almost blind from fatigue, stumbled down the grassy slopes toward the Swiss frontier.

But only a few crossed into Switzerland, where they collapsed on the grass after the Swiss had disarmer them. The remainder turned south, heading toward new positions to take up the battle again, again.

Some refused to believe Marshal Petain had offered to surrender.

"Propaganda!" gasped one.

"Everybody knows they have some of our radio stations. Propaganda! Listen! Does that sound like capitulation."

As he spoke, there came from across the verdant mountains the rumble of cannon and the rattle of machinegun fire.

The Germans were fighting across the Vosges Mountains in the face of stubborn resistance from French troops left to guard the southward retreat of their comrades toward Lyon.

Nazi motorized units clashed during the afternoon with the last part of this army and a remnant of another French force based at Dijon and Besancon.

The heaviest fighting was on the broad plain behind Pontarlier, about 30 miles southeast of Besancon. The French were fighting stubbornly to hold the town, which the Germans tried to enter after virtually surround it with motorized units and light field pieces.

Before nightfall several hundred French ran down across the valley on the frontier and about 40, mostly wounded, entered Switzerland. Spectators who ran to greet them found they were chasseurs, with their clothes in tatters and so utterly fatigued that many dropped to the ground at or near the border.

From behind weeks-old growths of beard they peered through bloodshot eyes at the Swiss frontier guards, handed them their rifles, and many of them collapsed into a stupor.

Boy Robbed of Relief Cash Belonging to Family of Seven

SISTER PROVES A FRIEND INDEED—A bitter two weeks is faced by the family of Michael Dunfee, of 518 D street northeast, whose five children include Collins, 12 (left), and Josephine, 3 (right). The boy, returning home with the $21.19 left of the family's relief check after he had paid the grocery bill, was robbed by two colored men. Sister Josephine offers her brother consolation as they eat what may their last meal at home until the next check is forthcoming

Pair Waylays 12-Year-Old Son of House On Way Home From Cashing Check; Veteran Sees Hungry Days for Brood

Fate heaped additional burdens yesterday on a relief family of seven when a 12-year-old son was robbed by two Negroes of most of the family's relief check after paying a grocery bill.

"We'll get by somehow," grimly remarked the father of the needy family, Michael Dunfee, 50, a World War veteran, who faced the prospect of a bitter two weeks. "I'll try to teach my children there are other things in life worth more than money," he added in a choking voice.

The money was stolen from Collins Dunfee, a son, who had left his home at 518 D street northeast early yesterday afternoon to sell some rags, then cash the $30 relief check by paying the grocer at Fourth and K streets.

Collins got 20 cents for the old rags, paid the grocery bill and was returning home when the Negroes seized an envelope from his right hip pocket containing the remainder, $21.19. The money was taken while the boy was pulling his cart in front of 813 Fourth street.

The robbers escaped through an alley.

Adversity is nothing new to the Dunfee family. The father said he had not worked steadily since the World War. Asked his status, he replied, with a note of irony, "I was just a corporal in the 112th Infantry—the same as Hitler and Mussolini."

There are five children in the family, each trying to do a bit to make ends meet. Besides Collins, there are Louisa, 15; Michael, jr., 14; John, 10, and Angeline, 3. The children help to collect rags and papers, which add a few cents a day to the family budget.

The father said he received home furnishings through the Self-Help Exchange at 1428 U street northwest. He helps to make brooms in return for some of the incidentals. At the same time, he added, he got his meals at the exchange, thus leaving more food at home for his wife and children.

"Sometimes the children eat at the exchange," he said. "The next few days they'll all have to go there to eat."

Collins was heartbroken over loss of the money, but was consoled by his parents.

Jealous Husband Beats Up Richard Arlen at Golf Club

Bing Crosby Sees Attack on Actor; Assailant Held

By the Associated Press

Hollywood, June 17.—Richard Arlen, film actor, was attacked and severely beaten today at the Wilshire Country Club golf course by William Tate, 30, of Hollywood, who accused him of stealing Mrs. Tate's love.

Olin Dutra, golf professional, and George Doyle, Arlen's caddy, pulled Tate off the actor. Tate was booked on suspicion of extortion after Arlen told officers he kidnaped him ten weeks ago and later came to his home threatening to beat him in efforts to collect $1,000.

Dozens of golfers, including Bing Crosby, Arlen's golf partner, saw the attack.

Tate asserted his wife met Arlen at party which Arlen and Walter Hagen, golf professional, gave last winter.

"Ever since that time, my wife has had nothing to do with me."

Arlen received a bruised jaw, a cut on his forehead and a back sprain, he said. He continued his golf game.

Arlen told officers the kidnaping occurred when he stepped from an airplane at Metropolitan Airport. He said Tate pulled a postol, forced him into an automobile and held nim prisoner for more than an hour, "accusing me of alienating his wife's affections and demanding $1,000 so he 'could get out of town.'"

"Naturally, I refused to pay him anything, for I was innocent."

Maimed Poilus End Trek Of Horror in Switzerland

By Charles S. Foltz, Jr.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Porrentruy, June 17.—Wounded and war-weary, a blind and halt column of men who can fight no more for France crossed tonight to this Franco-Swiss frontier town and raised the feeble cry of relief: "Vive la Suisse!"

In the caravan were 150—some eyeless, legless, armless, shell-torn.

They cheered when they were told they had come at last to rest. For five days the group of seriously wounded—they once numbered nearer 200—were shunted from field hospital to field hospital behind the fighting lines. Often they tried to sleep in their trucks, within the sound of battle.

Here they were promised hospitalization. Here they heard that France has asked for terms of surrender.

"So the war is over," said Pierre Dennis, of Limoges, whose feet were shot from under him in the battle of Flanders. "I cannot say I am sorry, even if we lost. We are all so tired—so weary."

Like the rest he was carried from the battlefields to hospital trucks, to hospitals in the field, then to Paris.

"We spent one night there in a real bed," he recalled. "Even if we did all have to go again on stretchers, it was wonderful."

The wounded were moved seven times. Some died en route.

Behind the critically wounded came others. They had wounds, but could stagger along the roads unaided.

Swiss officers promised them care in military hospitals in the Alps.

Tired as they were, they were hopeful.

"Maybe we'll get well again," said one. He was blind.

There were civilian refugees, too, jamming the roads to the frontier. The first started arriving two days ago. Many, however, turned back toward their homes when they learned of Premier Petain's statement that France had asked for terms.

Already an estimated 2,500 have entered Switzerland through Porrentruy, 1,000 through Le Locle and Chaux de Fonds, and 1,000 more through Le Suerrieres. Many of these were sent back into France through Geneva.

German-Russian Struggle for More Influence in Turkey Predicted

Plan to Divide Balkan Area Is Reported

Turkish Minister Leaves for Moscow Discussion Soon

By the Associated Press

Istanbul, June 17.—It was reported here tonight that Foreign Minister Saracoglu would leave soon for Moscow and a struggle between Russia and Germany for influence in Turkey was forecast. Russia is said to be favorably disposed toward the present Turkish government, but a triumph of German influence might bring a cabinet fall, with pro-Nazi Gen. Ali Ikdam Sabis taking over power.

Sabis retired some years ago after a dispute with the late Kamal Ataturk, "Strong Man of Turkey."

Some Turks expressed belief Russia would demand the right to occupy the Dardanelles fortifications.

Assembly Meets

The Turkish National Assembly met today to consider how the request of its ally, France, for an armistice with Germany would affect Italy.

Informed sources said she was looking especially to Russia for protection. It was said negotiations already were under way between them.

Conversations Held

Copyright by New York Times

Sofia, June 17.—Diplomatic circles said tonight that during the past two weeks conversations have been going on between Germany, Italy and Russia on plans for partitioning the entire southeastern part of Europe. According to these sources, the conversations were broken off temporarily but are expected to be resumed shortly.

These reports are not confirmable but because they emanate from responsible sources they are worthy of attention. It is said the plan under consideration when the talks ceased, was that Italy was to receive the Adriatic coast of Yugoslavia, and that Trieste was to be made a free port.

Germany demanded Hungary as a protectorate, central Yugoslavia and Transylvania. Russia demanded all of Rumania and Bulgaria as a protectorate. It is understood that negotiations broke off because of the German demand for Transylvania and the oil-bearing regions on the other side of the Carpathians, while the Russians wished all of Rumania.

These reports are stimulating the already nervous Balkan Peninsula to extreme worry. With the collapse of France they realize they are doomed as soon as the Axis and the Soviet agree on whether they wish to divide the section and how.

New Troop Movements

Tonight there are rumors of new and more active Russian troop movements along the Rumanian frontier. Much hope is placed on the Soviet drawing closer to England against their common Nazi enemy, but there is no confirmation of this belief.

Reliable Bucharest sources affirm that the Russians occupied the Baltic states to avert a Nazi plot aimed against the Soviet. It is definitely known that Sir Stafford Cripps, the British ambassador to Moscow, has been accorded full powers to negotiate any sort of arrangement at Moscow.

In the meantime, fear and gloom pervaded all regions, save possibly the Axis friends—Hungary and Bulgaria—and even there it is reasoned that independence, as it is now known, probably may be modified, and possibly ended.

Hitler Silent, French Fight On

of French children. It was only with this realization that France decided she had ot reform her cabinet. France decided that only with a new cabinet could her aims and purposes be carried through.]

Baudoin spoke as Hitler and Premier Mussolini arranged to meet tomorrow to give the verdict.

"With a broken heart," the new 84-year-old French premier, Henri Philippe Petain, who immortalized the words "They shall not pass" at Verdun in the World War, gave his countrymen today the decision that France must yield.

Petain made the sad explanation that France, on her knees before an overpowering enemy "superior in numbers and arms," had to give up, but he supported the Baudoin statement that France demands honor as well as peace.

Praising the help of Great Britain, Poland, Norway, Holland and Belgium, Baudoin said:

"We all were insufficiently prepared for this war with its new methods.

"Our allies were unable to give us aid which the French army, as the vanguard, needed. That is why Premier Petain has asked the enemy today for negotiations to cease fighting."

The French radio said at 10:35 p. m. (4:35 p. m., E. S. T.) there still was no reply from Germany in the request for an armistice.

(Eric Sevareid, C. B. S. reporter in France, in commenting on Baudoin's broadcast said the French cabinet would not accept an unconditional peace.)

France fully expected the price of cessation of the hostilities she joined with Great Britain last September 3 will be colonies, long disputed border areas such as Alsace-Lorraine on Germany's frontier and Nice and Savoy on Italy's Corsica in the Mediterranean and probably the French navy, second in Europe only to Britain's.

Petain told his red-eyed countrymen, weary and saddened beyond description, that he already had opened negotiations to stop the fighting.

In a firm voice, the 84-year-old soldier-diplomat said he had asked Hitler last night whether he was willing as one soldier to another to discuss peace—"with honor."

[Germany's reply had not reached the French government at 9 p. m. Monday, E. S. T.]

The German lines have pushed into a great curve sweeping from the English Channel 75 miles westward and south of Paris to the Loire River where they cut across to the Swiss frontier.

The defeat of the French army was acknowledged in the statement of a military spokesman who said at the afternoon press conference that there now is no continuous French front. The French, he said, had lost great quantities of artillery and other equipment.

This authoritative survey of France's military position was given:

The second army, which was charged with the defense of Paris, has fallen back to the Loire, which runs through Tours.

The first army, on the west, was south of the Seine on the sea side of Rouen and Evereux.

The third army, in the Champagne region, had its front broken in the recent German drive.

The fourth army on the Alps front is intact, the Italians having failed until now to attack.

It was the German advance which decided Paul Reynaud to resign the premiership last night to make way for the elevation of Petain as the one man he considered able to rally the French behind him for the fateful decision.

Spain Seen Intermediary

The end of French resistance was foreshadowed in this sudden replacement of the Reynaud government by a "peace cabinet" headed by Petain, teh last of France's old marshals.

Petain did not say how he contacted the Germans to sue for peace, but is was reported that it was accomplished with Spain as intermediary.

Petain was called out of often interrupted retirement to be France's ambassador to the government of Gen. Francisco Franco at the conclusion of the Spanish civil war.

French Premier's Text

'With a Broken Heart, I Say It's Necessary to Stop'—Petain

Bordeaux, June 17.—Following is the text of Premier Marshal Henri Petain's radio announcement today of France's readiness to sue for peace:

Frenchmen:

At the call of the President of the Republic, I assumed, beginning today, the direction of the government of France.

I say that by the affection of our admirable army, which is fighting with a heroism worthy of its long military traditions against an enemy superior in numbers and arms, by the magnificent resistnace with which it has fulfilled our duties to our Allies, by the aid of the war veterans whom I am proud to command, by the confidence of all the people, I give to Frnace my person to assuage her misfortune.

In these painful hours I think of the unhappy refugees who, in extreme misery clog up our roads. I express to them my compassion and my solicitude.

It is with broken heart that I tell you today it is necesary to stop the fighting.

I addressed myself last night to the adversary to ask him if he is ready to seek with me, as soldier to soldier, after the actual fighting is over and with honor, the means of putting an end to hostilities.

May all Frenchmen group themselves about the government which I head during these trying days, and control their anguish in order to be led only by their faith in the destiny of the Fatherland.

Polish and Czech Envoys Anxious For Exile Armies

Polish and Czech diplomats in Washington yesterday expressed anxiety for the fate of two refugee armies which face surrender or another flight to carry on their war against Nazi Germany.

Col. Vladimir Hurban, Czecho-Slovakian Minister to the United States and dean of Washington's corps of diplomats without countries, said he is "very much in the dark" as to the status of the Czech legions which have been fighting on the Western Front.

No word has been received here as to the position of Polish units in France, according to Jan Drohojowski, counselor of the Polish Embassy. The diplomat added that the embassy has no news of the whereabouts of the provisional Polish government, which formerly had headquarters at Angiers, France.

Drohojowski said, however, that his government has issued a pledge "to continue fighting in spite of any developments."

Mussolini Speeds to Munich to Meet Hitler on the Fate of France

At the same time, the Italian high command reported aerial assaults on Allied naval bases and flying fields yesterday in Malta, Corsica and Tunisia.

Although Italian forces have been reported active on land, especially in pushing beyond the Alpine border into France, Italy has been fighting principally in the air.

New posters which were plastered on the walls of Rome quoting Italian heroes on the Italianism of Nice, now belonging to France, indicated the Fascists intended to claim that city along with the French region of Savoy. Both once belonged to Italy.

Corsica, the island off western Italy, Tunisia, in Africa, and Djibouti, the French-held port which is the terminus of the only railroad running to Italy's Ethiopian possessions, are the other Italian objectives in the war.

Peace Terms Reported

Rome, June 17 (U.P.)—Terms of the armistice, it was stated authoritatively, will provide for military occupation of France and French possessions by Italo-German forces.

Germany, Italy, Spain and possibly Japan and Belgium will take parts of the French empire, it was reported reliably.

On the basis of authoritative information here, it was believed this disposition would be made of France:

1. Germany to receive Alsace and Lorraine and a generous share of French colonial possessions.
2. Italy to receive Nice and Savoy, a part of Algeria, Corsica, French Somaliland and other parts of the French Empire in Africa.
3. Spain to receive a part of French Morocco and possibly part of the Basque country, now divided between France and Spain.
4. Japan to receive certain French possessions in the Far East and the Pacific, notably French Indo-China.
5. Belgium to receive certain French Channel ports, providing Belgium concludes a close military and political alliance with Germany.

It was emphasized that this program was speculative, but it conformed on broad lines to opinion held in high Italian circles, to whom France's capitulation was not unexpected.

Italians continued reconnaissance activity in the Alps along the French border and clashed with British troops in North Africa.

The Italian communique said a civilian was killed at Savona and several others were wounded by British airmen. Six aviation technicians were killed and 30 wounded in an air attack on an Italian airdrome.

A strong tone toward Egypt was taken by the Rome newspaper Il Tevere, which declared that the "attitude assumed by the Egyptian government is inadmissable."

In his declaration of war, Mussolini said Egypt would not be molested while she remained neutral. Since then, Egypt, bound to Britain by a military alliance, has broken diplomatic relations with Italy and has informed the Italians she would go to war if they attacked Egyptian forces or territory.

German Scheme to Seize Uruguay Discovered, 12 Leaders Arrested

Legislators Study Plot in Secret At Montevideo

By John W. White
Copyright by New York Times

Montevideo, June 17.—Uruguay's police have discovered a Nazi military plot to seize Uruguay with the help of German war veterans from Argentina and to turn this country into an agricultural colony of the Third Reich.

Twelve Nazi party leaders have been arrested. Although their identity is not yet made public, it is understood that they include all the principal local Nazi leaders with the exception of Julius Dalldorf, "little fuehrer" for Uruguay, who is protected from arrest because he is on the staff of the German legation as press attache.

The chief evidence of the plot is reported to consist of a fragmentary document, found in the residence of Arnulf Fuhrmann, Nazi district leader, at Salto, Uruguay. Although part of this document is said to be missing, the part in the possession of the police is reported to contain sufficient details to show a plot of the most sensational nature.

Chamber Meets in Secret

The Chamber of Deputies went into secret session tonight to hear these details in the report of its special committee that has been investigating Nazi activities. It had been expected that they would be made public, but the majority decided that there was so much "dynamite" in the findings that the Deputies must meet behind closed doors.

The plot, it is revealed by well-informed persons, provides for the stirring of a revolt of the Uruguayan army and the distributing of units of the revolters at strategic points throughout the country. Then there is to be organized a reserve of a thousand or more German war veterans from Argentina, who are to be mobilized at Montevideo.

The scheme is reported to include plans for setting up a temporary government in Uruguay, presumably until the Reich can send out permanent government heads.

Plan to Slay Jews

It is also reported that the plan, as discovered, included the wholesale assassination of Uruguayan political leaders, Jews and Masons.

The scheme is also said to have provided for the confiscation of all lands belonging to the three Uruguayan state banks. Lands of absentee landlords also were to be seized, as was the property of all persons who did not care to live under a German regime.

It is reported in judicial circles that Fuhrmann has confessed that the plan, held by the police, is in his own handwriting, but to have said that it was merely a joke without any importance.

Planned for January

Apparently the Nazi coup was planned for January of this year, but was postponed on the advice of Dalldorf, who felt that Hitlerism in Europe was not sufficiently strong at that time to justify an attack in South America.

The police are reported to have uncovered evidence that the Nazis were then planning to put the plot into effect this month, but were blocked by the severe military measures that the minister of defense put into effect as soon as the plot was discovered.

It is understood that the revelation of this plot was to have been the high note of the report to have been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon by the committee investigating Nazi activities. Submission of this report was delayed, however, by a parliamentary quarrel, arising from the majority's insistence that the report be submitted at a secret session because of its sensational nature and the probability that it would offend a foreign power.

Deputy Jose Pedro Cardoso, whose original denunciations led to the appointment of the investigating committee, charged the deputies with cowardice in the face of continual German victories in Europe. He said he was convinced that there were sufficient reserves of democratic men and resources in the world that it was still possible to halt Fuehrer Hitler.

Montevideo Headquarters

"Even if there are not," he said, "and we have to go down before the onslaught of the barbarians, Uruguay as one of the outstanding democracies of the world, even though small, should not flee from this opportunity to reveal what the Germans are plotting to do in South America."

The investigating committee has tried to keep its work secret, but it is now reported that its highly dramatic findings show that Montevideo was to be the international headquarters for a Nazi scheme to absorb the entire South American continent into the Third Reich.

The secret session this evening was still arguing with the minister of the interior for some time after it convened, but it was expected to begin hearing the report before morning.

VARIETY CLUB CONTRIBUTES—A $200 check for the needy Children's Camp Fund was presented yesterday to Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the Council of Church Women, by Rudolph Berger, chairman of the welfare fund committee of the Variety Club, whose members are in the show business. Judge Fay Bentley (left) was present. Flanders Tactics of 5th Column Revealed by De Chambrun

Count Rene de Chambrun, new French assistant military attache who recently arrived here from the Belgian battlefield, yesterday revealed in an interview how German fifth columnists laid the groundwork for the entrapment of the Allied armies in Flanders.

The count, who was among the soldiers that managed to escape the Flanders trap in the "miracle" evacuation from Dunkirk, said the French and British troops that marched to the aid of the Belgians soon discovered that they not only had to fight the German army in front of them, but also the German agents behind the lines.

"As soon as we entered Belgium, we learned that fifth column agents were spreading rumors to induce the panic-stricken people to flee," De Chambrun said. "The result of this exodus, 'organized' by the Germans, was that every road and practically every field was blocked by refugees, thus rendering every military movement impossible."

Behind billboard advertisements of certain products fifth columnists had pasted maps of Belgium to guide the German invaders, said the count, who is a descendant of the Marquis de Lafayette. Among the streams of refugee wagons the French discovered carts in which German troops were hidden, some in civilian clothes.

"Fifth columnists supplied fuel to German mechanized units which went through the Ardennes forest," declared the new attache. "Three generals were assassinated at their headquarters by parachute troops."

He added that on one occasion, when he was carrying dispatches, he came upon 15 German tanks firing on civilians 100 kilometers behind the lines.

Count de Chambrun expressed faith in Britain's ability finally to defeat Hitler.

"If in the past we have underestimated the Germans," said the envoy, "let us not now make the mistake of overestimating them."

Great Britain, he felt, has had time to prepare for Hitler's army now, and is ready, so that "the thousands of French soldiers, sailors, pilots and civilians who gave their lives to Allied cause have not died in vain."

Sam Beard Loses Freedom Appeal

Sam Beard, 45-year-old Washington gambling baron, lost his fight for release from Atlanta Penitentiary by a decision of the United States Court of Appeals here yesterday.

Beard, serving two to six years for running a gambling establishment, had contended that when wire tapping was declared unconstitutional he was entitled to release. Justice Wiley Rutledge held this point had been decided against Beard by Federal courts in Atlanta and New Orleans.

Beard is due to be released September 10.

Police Hold Caller At British Embassy

A 35-year-old man, who told police he had important military secrets that would aid the British, was taken into custody yesterday outside the British Embassy at 3100 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Police said the man was found pacing up and down the side driveway of the embassy. He said he was anxious to reveal his secrets to the British Ambassador. Police took him to Gallinger Hospital for observation.

Franco Invited to Mediate In French-Axis Peace Talks

By the Associated Press

Madrid, June 17.—Generalissimo Franco, Spain's leader who once studied military science under Marshal Petain, was reported tonight to have been invited to act as intermediary in negotiations for an armistice requested for France by the aged marshal, now premier of France.

Usually reliable sources said Franco also had been invited to send delegates to any peace discussions which might result from the armistice negotiations between France and the Axis powers.

(Spain's participation in peace negotiations revived speculation as to whether Hitler and Mussolini might not be attempting to revive Spanish interest in an attempt to take Gibraltar from the British. There have been loud demonstrations in Spanish cities recently demanding Gibraltar for Spain.)

Sources close to the foreign ministry declared Germany had asked Spain to take part in the peace negotiations with France.

The Spanish press headlined dispatches from Bordeaux reporting that negotiations between France and Germany had been effected through Spanish diplomatic circles.

The newspapers pointed to this as an indication Spain's "national personality" is being recognized in Europe. They commented, however, that Petain's appeal for an honorable peace "won't divert our gaze" from Spanish objectives.

To these, in which the press has mentioned Gibraltar and control of sections of northwestern Africa, the afternoon newspaper, Informaciones, added Andorra, 175-mile square principality in the mountains between Spain and France.

Diver Finds Body In Severn River

Annapolis, June 17 (AP).—A Navy diver and search party recovered the body of Otis D. Burnett, Dana, Ind., seaman, from the Severn River today.

County police said a preliminary investigation indicated Burnett, a pharmacist mate attached to the Navay Academy, jumped or fell from the Severn River Bridge last night.

forces and the occupation of French territory in Europe and Africa.

Apart from these topics, the conferees will have before them the all important problem of the prosecution of the war against the British Empire. In fact, it would seem likely that this question will occupy appreciably more of their attention than will the treatment of Britain's defeated ally.

France Must Accept

Berlin, June 17 (AP).—The crumbling of French military resistance went on apace today. The mighty French fortress at Metz fell before German onslaughts this afternoon, the German high command reported.

In the east France was virtually wide open to tremendous blows which Germany's unexhausted forces were in position to strike.

The request for terms by Marshal Petain, France's new premier, appeared to be a mere formality and the prospects were that he and France would be obliged to accept whatever decision the axis powers may impose and be resigned to impotence for the duration of the war.

(Tonight the German radio, in a broadcast heard by N. B. C. in New York, said "the time has come for them—the French—to take what they once gave Germany." The broadcast said "in reference to the terms which Germany will impose on France, the time has arrived for Germans to remember Compeigne, at which time Marshal Foch not only dictated the most bestial terms but also humiliated Germany into the dust. We are now able to say that no living German has forgotten it or will ever forget it.")

Indications were that the conference between Hitler and Mussolini would take up all aspects—political, military and social—of the future course to be mapped out for France.

Observers recalled that Italy has demanded Tunis, Nice and Corsica and remembered also that demands have come from the highest German quarters for the complete crushing of the military power of France.

It seemed certain, however, that in specifying terms, Germany would see to it that once and for all France would be eliminated as a fighting force.

Berlin Exultant

All Germany was thrown into ecstasies at the news that at least a part of the war in France had ended.

The broadcast bulletin from Hitler's headquarters caught Berliners at their mid-afternoon rush.

Traffic halted. Everybody paused to listen. Cheers welled from thousands of throats. Strangers embraced each other. Women kissed each other amid tears of joy.

Usually reserved Berliners broke into strains of Deutschland Uber Alles, Die Wacht am Rhein and the Horst Wessel song.

Drive to Swiss

Announcement of the French offer came after the German high command said French forces had been cut in two by a swift Nazi plunge to the Swiss border near Bensancon to form a "sack" around remnants of the hard-pressed Poilus.

The drive to the Swiss border followed quickly the storming and capture of some of the strongest forts of the Maginot Line.

The Nazi high command announced tonight the capture of the fortress of Metz, one of the strongpoints of the Maginot Line. Germany surrendered Metz to the French in the Versailles settlement after the World War.

"Continue to Fight"

The press and Nazi officialdom remained silent on the possible terms likely to be presented France, but both quarters have raised the cry since the start of the swift campaign in the west more than a month ago for "complete destruction" of the French army.

"No separate armistice with France is imaginable except in terms of complete capitulation," authorized sources said today. "We continue to fight."

Before the announcement of the peace move the Germans reported some 1,000,000 French troops had been surrounded in the Saint Mihiel area, where American doughboys turned the tide of battle for the Allies in September, 1918.

Huge Booty Taken

Epinal, Toul, St. Mihiel, Verdun, all of which conjure up memories of the World War, fell into the hands of the Germans while artillery and bombers pounded the main French line.

Authorities here refused to estimate the extent of the victory over France. They said that uncounted prisoners and inestimable booty had been taken.

The high command said French armies driven southward from Paris "notably dissolved," although it conceded small forces were putting up orderly resistance.

Orleans Falls

In a lightning stab almost rivaling the break-through to Switzerland, motorized units took Orleans, the high command said, 70 miles south of Paris on the vital natural defense line of the Loire River and saved an important bridge intact for the use of forces coming up.

Along the rest of the Loire River the German air force was said to have smashed other bridges and bombed and machine-gunned retreating French on the river bank in sight of the high plateau south of the Loire, where it was expected they had been preparing a new defense line.

Terms to Be Harsh

Berlin (Tuesday) June 18 (INS).—Germany's controlled press today indicated that armistice terms for France would be stern.

Unconditional surrender on terms as harsh as those imposed on Germany in the armistice of November, 1918, will be France's lot, it was implied.

Hitler's own newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, said:

"For decades, years, months and weeks, the plutocracies have missed their chances to come to an honest understanding with Germany.

"Now, in 24 hours, should 20-year-old sins and shameful acts be forgiven?

"Weygand and his master, Foch, did not speak as 'soldier to soldier' on November 11, 1918," the paper said, quoting a phrase used by Marshal Petain in his appeal.

Lokal Anzeiger commented:

"There are a few words in this war to be burned into France: 'Finish that eternal French threat on Germany's western border!'"

Nazis See British Fall in Six Weeks

By the Associated Press

Adolf Hitler's timetable calls for capture of the British Isles within six weeks after he undertakes to invade them, well informed Washington diplomatic circles heard yesterday.

These circles added, however, that they had no information as to when the Fuehrer intended to begin his "blitzgkrieg" against England.

Churchill Tells Britain Struggle Will Continue

even with the Axis acceptance of peace dependent upon it.

France's plea for peace was tragic news for the United Kingdom, but it was neither overwhelming nor wholly a surprise.

The British recalled and published with pride Hitler's own words from "Mein Kampf" that Great Britain is "the most valuable ally in the world" when aroused.

They quoted Hitler in praise of "the tenacity in its (Britain's) government as well as the spirit of its broad masses, which enable it to carry through to victory any struggle that it once enters upon, no matter how long such a struggle may last, however great a sacrifice may be necessary, or whatever means must be employed, and even though the military equipment at hand be utterly inadequate when compared to that of other nations."

Englishmen quoted to each other the words of Prime Minister Churchill June 4:

"We will defend the island whatever the cost. We will fight on the beaches and landing grounds, in the fields, in the streets, on the hills.

"We will never surrender, and even if—which I do not for a moment believe—this island or a large part of it be subjugated and starved, then our empire beyond the seas, armed and guarded by the British fleet, will carry on the struggle.

What British Expect

In this hour of considering the worst which might follow a separate peace between France and Germany, these expectations were advanced:

1. An attempt might be made to encircle, blockade and starve the British Isles. The British navy, most powerful in the world, is considered equal to the task of preventing such an achievement.

2. Germany might try to bomb Britain into submission. This method was considered most likely to be tried first. The defense is a high-speed aviation program which depends on unlimited supplies of war, including oil, from the Dominions and the United States.

3. Invasion may be attempted. This has been expected for weeks. Besides the great fleet, the Royal Air Force and ground troops of the amateur army are anxious to demonstrate that a country which has not been successfully invaded since 1066 will make short work of parachute troops or any others arriving by trick devices.

Timing Important

Much depends on timing. An England worn by siege and semi-starvation might not be able to resist an invasion as it could today.

Likewise a combination of the blockade and bombardment might defeat the British eventually. The supply lines must be kept open.

Said a government spokesman in explaining that the French move for an armistice was known in advance:

"In their unshakable determination to achieve victory no matter what the cost, the Government and the Empire have the united support of their people."

"The full brunt of this war must now fall on this island," said Lord Beaverbrook's standard. It continued:

"No strong point must be left unguarded. No resource must be left unused. No man must be without his duty. The sea is still our strength."

Some observers said every able-bodied man from 18 to 65 would be put into service either as a combatant or a worker on essential service in the war program.

Other developments:

The admiralty issued an order that every British ship in a United Kingdom port must have adequate numbers of the crew aboard at all times to man defensive guns and fire-fighting equipment.

The dowager Marchioness of Reading, head of the Women's Voluntary Services, ordered the 630,000 members to "stay at your posts and carry out your duty whatever circumstances may arise." She added, "We do not wish to survive at the expense of our country's fair name."

The Bank of England banned dealings in Canadian and United States stocks and bonds. The order was the latest in a series to conserve foreign exchange.

All Dutch, Norwegian and Polish ships bound for French ports were ordered to proceed instead to British ports.

Sir Nevile Henderson, last British Ambassador to Germany, said he expected that Germany would attempt to invade England at once.

France Hard to Hold

A government spokesman argued that, although "countries may be successfully overrun by tanks, once the task of overrunning is done they cannot be governed by tanks," he added:

"The French have never taken kindly to invaders and we can, I think, reasonably expect that the task of holding down France, which is a very large country, is going to be one of exceptional difficulty.

"It sometimes happens that the more spectacular an advance of this nature, the more spectacular is the subsequent withdrawal."

Vernon Bartlett, member of Parliament, declared in a broadcast tonight that "at whatever cost, Germany can and will be defeated."

"The British have faced the continent of Europe alone before now and been victorious," he said.

"Now we are not alone. We have the increasing support of the Dominions and the United States."

which would have these functions:

To buy up exportable surpluses of cotton, copper, wheat, meats, coffee, fruits, hides and skins produced by the republics of Latin America and, perhaps, Canada.

To sell these goods either in this hemisphere or abroad for cash or by barter, using methods first perfected by Germany's economic wizard, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht.

To act as purchasing agency in Europe and other transocean continents for the members of the cartel.

To control prices of goods produced from Cape Horn to the Arctic Ocean, drive hard bargains with the dictatorship economies in Europe.

To regulate production of these goods in this hemisphere so that the "American corporation" could protect its funds from the strain of run-away bumper crops.

Participation in the plan by Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and perhaps other areas also was under discussion.

Experts said yesterday that operating such a corporation would involve about one billion dollars a year of this country's wealth, of which half would be lost. This loss, they maintained, would be cheaper in the long run than allowing a highly organized Europe, probably controlled by Germany, to gain control of the economic life of Latin America.

The Cabinet members' meeting yesterday, announced by the President's secretary, Stephen T. Early, will meet again and draw up a report for the President, which would be submitted to the other republics and to other interested countries for their approval.

The giant plan, a corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, was described officially as a sort of fortified trade wall, behind whose protection the countries of this hemisphere, with the cooperation perhaps of the British dominions, could work out a new way of economic life without German and Italian interference.

Congressional action would be necessary to set up such a corporation and preliminary comment of several Senators was favorable.

The size of the problem with which the proposed trade corporation would have to cope was shown by these Commerce Department figures:

Germany in 1938 imported 16 per cent of the Latin-American coffee shipments, second only to the United States. Germany also took 23 per cent of the wool, 29 per cent of the cotton, 12 per cent of the metals other than copper and tin, 25 per cent of the hides and skins and 19 per cent of the corn and large quantities of cacao fiber and wood.

Belgium, France and Italy—which now may be considered under Nazi economic influence—imported large shares of maize, linseed, petroleum, cotton, metals, cereals and wheat.

In 1938 the United States bought about one-third of the Latin-American exports, Great Britain took 15.9 per cent, Germany, 10.5 per cent; France, 4 per cent; Italy, 1.5, and Japan, 1.3 per cent.

Manufacturers, Union, Builders Join to Bar Trusts

Chicago, June 17 (AP).—A group of manufacturers today joined with a labor union and a contractor's association in a pledge to prevent violation of the Sherman antitrust act industry.

Defendants in an antitrust case from Chicago, St. Louis and Detroit approved the consent decree which obviated trial of the criminal case in any districts where the indictments were returned.

Federal Judge Michael L. Igoe also received pleas from six manufacturers and four of their representatives in which they declined to admit or contest antitrust charges brought against a total of 41 defendants in the tile industry.

Judge Igoe set July 1 for disposition of the cases. The pleas and the consent decree, together with others entered a week ago, now embrace all defendants.

A LOAN is not a favor . . .

Frequently people hesitate to ask for financial assistance, in the erroneous impression the bank is granting a favor, by making the loan. This is a mistaken belief, of course, because the arrangement of a sound loan is a regular business proposition.

The borrower benefits, naturally, if he has good reasons for borrowing. And the bank and its depositors benefit because of the interest received from a constant volume of sound loans. 3-Cornered Race for Presidency Heads Junior Chamber Program

Convention Decides To Restrict Talk On Defense Issues

A lively three-cornered race for the presidency of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce was in the making yesterday as delegates gathered for the organization's twenty-first annual convention opening tomorrow.

The candidates established separate campaign headquarters in the Mayflower Hotel and began buttonholing incoming delegates while the executive committee, in a pre-convention session, decided against overemphasis of national defense problems during the conclave.

The chamber's steering body also heard a report on interstate trade barriers from Campbell Thornal, of Orlando, Fla., chairman of the research committee, who declared:

"The current world crisis, which will ultimately be reflected in unparalleled commercial disorders, serves only to intensify the hazards of unrestrained limitation on the freedom of commerce between our own States."

He suggested that the chamber "bring to the attention of the American public the dangers of continued unrestrained 'throat-cutting' between States" and recommended establishment of State Junior Chamber governmental committees to approach the problem in conjunction with a national committee on government affairs.

Selection of a 1941 convention city Friday and election of a new president at the closing business session Saturday are expected to provide the greatest amount of interest for the 2,000 delegates from 48 States, Alaska and Hawaii.

Intent on becoming president are three present vice presidents: Mark S. Matthews, assistant corporation counsel of New York City; Hugh Owens, Oklahoma City lawyer, and Joe E. Levitt, San Jose, Calif., radio sales executive.

Banners, promises and bids for the next convention are going out from Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Chicago, Grand Rapids, Mich., Dallas, Tex., and St. Louis.

R.A.F. Bombers Destroy 100 Italian Planes

Ranking Officer, 600 Prisoners Captured, British Declare

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Egypt (Tuesday), June 18 The British Air Force reported early today that in repeated raids on Italian African bases it had destroyed at least 100 planes on the ground.

Authoritative reports reaching here from the border of Italian Libya said also that the British have taken more than 600 prisoners, including one high-ranking Italian officer.

Dozen Bases Raided

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, June 17.—Bombing raids are increasing in violence throughout the whole of northeastern Africa from Libya to Ethiopia. Nearly a dozen Italian naval bases, air bases and frontier forts were attacked yesterday without the loss of a single Royal Air Force machine.

The Italians struck back at Malta and the Egyptian bases at Sollum, Sidi Barrani and Mersa Matruh, which once was Cleopatra's bathing place on the Egyptian coast, but now the British military center.

Italian bombers yesterday carried out four raids on Mersa, Egypt. Five soldiers were killed and nine injured when bombs fell on their barracks. The British infantry barracks were straddled by bombs in the first raid carried out in the morning by three planes. There were no casualties on this occasion.

Attack Barracks

Thirteen minutes later four more bombers flew over, attacking the Egyptian barracks. The third and fourth raids, which began in the afternoon, were carried out by nine and three planes respectively.

Newspaper correspondents arrived in Mersa fifteen minutes before the afternoon raids began. While taking shelter in a dugout a 200-pound bomb exploded three feet from the entrance, demolishing it. Richard Mowrer, of the Chicago Daily News, and the officer conducting the party were buried under the wreckage.

Both were taken to the hospital, the officer unconscious and Mowrer with face injuries. An ambulance squad took three quarters of an hour to release Mowrer and the officer and another air raid followed before they were able to get the men out.

Bomb Gasoline Dumps

The R. A. F. again raided Tobruk, the second most important Italian port in Libya, bombing and causing extensive damage to ammunition and gasoline dumps in one of a series of telling air attacks on Italian African colonies today.

Further attacks were made on Diredawa in Ethiopia and Masawa in Eritrea. At Diredawa a large hangar was fired and a three-engined Italian bomber burst into flames after a direct hit. A fighter which tried to intercept the raiders was hit and believed shot down as it dived at great speed, belching clouds of black smoke.

In operations carried out by the South African air force at Iavello, in Italian East Africa, eight Italian aircraft on the ground were damaged. Fierce machine-gun fire kept the Italian fighters grounded.

Coal Merchants Reelect Burnley

Old Point Comfort, Va., June 17 (AP).—Nathanial Burnley, of Charlottesville, will head the Virginia Coal Merchants Association for another year.

He was reelected at the closing session of the association's annual convention at the Chamberlin Hotel Saturday, when resolutions were adopted urging the General Assembly to give careful consideration to increasing the State police force, commending the work of Col. M. S. Battle, motor vehicle director, in fighting "gypsy" coal truckers, and offering the association's cooperation in State and national defense plans.

French Reject Churchill's Offer for Union of Empires to Carry On War

British Ambassador Sir Ronald Campbell at Bordeaux.

This proposal foresaw the collapse of the French armies but was put forward as a means whereby the French nation could carry on the struggle in the colonies abroad, on the sea and in the air.

Hopes that the scheme would be accepted persisted in British government circles up to the last minute.

Those hopes accounted for the authoritative British statement late Sunday that, even though French resistance on land should be seriously weakened or should collapse, the strong French navy would continue to fight beside the British fleet and enforce the blockades of Germany and Italy.

Reynaud, too, hoped until the last that he could persuade his government to accept the scheme because word from Bordeaux just before his downfall said that "decisions of great strategic and political importance" were about to be taken.

Even tonight authoritative British quarters, although admitting that the proposal "may be presumed to have lapsed," insisted that it still might be renewed.

Any renewal of the offer, however, now that France is awaiting Hitler's peace conditions, must be dependent on what the British call "changed conditions."

This implied a belief Hitler's terms might be too harsh and severe for France to accept with any degree of honor.

French Foreign Minister Baudouin's radio warning that France will fight on if Hitler attempts to impose "shameful" terms no doubt accounted for the authoritative British statement tonight that:

"In changed circumstances our offer may be renewed."

Reynaud's Effort

Reynaud's championship of the "act of union" proposal was cited in London as proof that he tried honorably to fulfill France's previous promise not to conclude a separate peace with Germany.

The scheme would have succeeded, the British said, and would have worked out in equitable manner for both Britain and France.

The British empire, with its tremendous resources intact, would have taken over all liabilities of its ally, France, which was in a far less fortunate position, and there never would have been any question of Britain gaining advantages in the French colonies or elsewhere, the British added.

Draft of Offer

By the Associated Press

London, June 17.—Following is the draft declaration of the "solemn act of union" offered to France by Great Britain, according to the official British announcement:

The declaration of union:

At this most fateful moment in the history of modern world, the government of the United Kingdom and the French Republice make this declaration of indissoluble union and unyielding resolution in their common defence of justice and freedom against subjection to a system which reduces mankind to a life of robots and slaves.

The two governments declare that France and Great Britain shall no longer be two but one Franco-British Union.

The constitution of the union will provide for joint organs and defense, foreign, financial and economic policies.

Every citizen of France will enjoy immediately citizenship of Great Britain, every British subject will become a citizen of France.

Both countries will share responsibilities for the repair of the devastation of war, wherever it occurs in their territories, and the resources of both shall be equally and as one applied to that purpose.

Single War Cabinet

During the war there shall be a single war cabinet and all the forces of Britain and France, whether on land, sea or in the air, will be placed under its direction. It will govern from wherever it best can. The two parliaments will be formally associated.

The nations of the British Empire are already forming new armies. France will keep her available forces in the field, on the sea and in the air. The Union appeals to the United States to fortify the economic resources of the Allies and to bring her powerful material aid to the common cause.

The Union will concentrate its whole energy against the power of the enemy, no matter where the battle may be.

And thus we shall conquer.

U. S. Planes Fly Over Border

Meanwhile, the Treasury facilitated the rush delivery of fighting planes to the Allies by a ruling that allows ships to be flown across the American borders.

Formerly planes bought here by the Allies had to be landed on United States soil and pushed over the Canadian border to comply with the "passage of title" requirements of the Neutrality Act.

A new interpretation of the law, drafted by Treasury General Counsel Edward F. Foley, jr., and indorsed by the State Department said that title can pass in the air while the planes are crossing the border.

The ruling means that now, for the first time since passage of the neutrality law, the Allies can buy planes at an American factory and fly them all the way to embarkation or take-off points in Canada. Theoretically, they could fly the planes direct from the United States to Europe, but such a flight would be too long for most types of planes purchased.

Congress Must Remain

Speaker Bankhead has done well to scotch the assumption that Congress may be able to adjourn on Saturday. An adjournment at this time would suggest that Congress is abdicating its responsibilities instead of completing its work.

The amazing thing is that some leaders are urging the Legislature to leave its tasks unfinished and go home as the international chaos reaches a new peak. In explanation of this strange policy Senator Barkley, the Senate majority leader, simply expressed a belief that "it would be a good thing for Congress to go home and find out what the people think about the world situation and our own situation."

Congressmen who go home to sound out public opinion are almost certain to discover that the people think they should be on the job in Washington.

The simple fact is that the critical developments in Europe and problems of our own national defense demand day-to-day examination by both the executive and legislative branches of government to make certain that American interests are protected. Congress cannot adjourn at such a time without grossly sidestepping its obligation to the country. In this hour of crisis for democracy such a short-sighted policy would be doubly inexcusable.

Of almost equal importance is the fact that Congress cannot possibly finish its work this week, unless it should jam bills through the legislative mill with utter recklessness. Several national defense bills require further action. The revenue bill is still before the Senate. The relief bill, carrying also $50,000,000 for war relief in Europe, is in conference, as is the measure to permit defense industry loans by the RFC.

The collapse of French resistance gives additional point to the resolution reaffirming the American policy of preventing the transfer of territory in this hemisphere to any non-American power. That resolution has not yet been passed by either house.

Other vital measures awaiting action by the House or Senate are the Ramspeck bill extending the civil service system, the Hatch "clean politics" bill, the Walter-Logan bill, the Smith bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act and a measure to liquidate our wasteful and costly policy of purchasing foreign silver. Here is a formidable legislative program. Some of these bills would doubtless now be law if they had not been displaced by more urgent questions of national defense. Obviously they should not be lost on that account.

It is to be taken for granted that Congress will recess for both the Republican and Democratic National Conventions. Otherwise the session should continue until the work of Congress is much nearer completion than it is now, and until the international situation permits legislators to go home without an uncomfortable feeling that they are evading a great responsibility.

Timely Action

In considering plans for the defense of this hemisphere the economic aspects of inter-American relations are no less important than the strategic.

Under circumstances that obtained in the past, Latin America's dependence on European markets constituted no danger to them or to us. But a Europe dominated by the totalitarian powers could use that dependence for purposes that might very easily imperil the security of individual nations of the New World and of the hemisphere as a whole.

For this reason there is a peculiar timeliness in President Roosevelt's instruction to the Secretaries of State, Agriculture, Treasury and Commerce to investigate "the most effective manner of disposing profitably of export surpluses in the Western Hemisphere." Once worked out, the all-American trade program will be transmitted to the other American governments for their views and their suggestions.

Europe is being united by fire and sword and at a fearful cost in blood and treasure. The free nations of this hemisphere are called upon to close their ranks through cooperation. And no tie is more important than the tie of mutually profitable trade.

It may be assumed that this move to intensify commercial cooperation between nations of the Western Hemisphere will be quickly followed by efforts to work out mutual defense policies.

France Goes Down

There is a limit to the punishment and suffering which human beings can endure. That limit was reached in France early Monday morning when Marshal Petain, replacing Paul Reynaud as premier, ordered the French armies to lay down their arms.

For 38 days the soldiers of the republic had fought against overwhelming odds with a gallantry and tenacity worthy of their great tradition. They fought with the courage and determination of men literally defending their homes and their altars, their country and their civilization. They fought every inch of the way, inflicting fearful damage on the invading Germans. It was all in vain.

Pushed from the Meuse, they re-formed their lines along the Somme. Driven from the Somme they retreated to the Seine. They fought on even after Paris was lost. But by that time, with the German forces pressing down upon them from the north and the Italians moving against them from the south, their plight had become hopeless. By that time the French army had used up its reserves, most of its air force, a very large part of its mechanized equipment. Continuation of the struggle would have meant additional bloodshed and destruction on a large scale with no advantage to be gained thereby.

So France has joined Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Luxembourg, Belgium and the Netherlands as a prisoner of the Third Reich. The land of Montaigne and Descartes, of Victor Hugo and Pascal and St. Joan and myriads of others representing the finest flower of the human mind and spirit now lies prostrate before the Nazi conquerors. Nor is the tragedy France's alone. It is mankind's tragedy as well.

This is no time for recriminations. Undoubtedly the French could have ordered things better, as could all the other democracies which, though warned in time, did not act in time. What the French could not believe they did not fear and when, during those last desperate weeks, the full magnitude of the problem facing them became clear it was then too late. For seven years Hitler had harnessed all the material and human resources of a great nation to the sole task of military preparation. So, despite the wealth and resources of the Allies, the force he was able to hurl against the French could not be matched.

Hitler is now master of the European continent. His armies, his air force, his submarines are now poised for an assault on England. The outlook is grim. It is grim for those who have been conquered. It is grim for the peoples of the British Isles now confronted by the most powerful force which Europe has ever seen. It is grim for all peoples, however seemingly remote, from the scene of carnage, destruction and disaster.

With the terrible fate of France before us, we cannot shirk or delay for one moment the task of making ourselves strong. In a world where military force gives quick mastery we must assiduously cultivate that force until our security is fully assured.

Far Eastern Echoes

The dispute between Japan and Great Britain at Tientsin, which almost a year ago led Japan to impose a rigorous blockade of the British concession there, was recently settled. The full text of the accord has not yet been made public. The indications are, however, that the terms are reasonable and mutually satisfactory. On this occasion, apparently, the Japanese refrained from capitalizing on Britain's multiplying difficulties.

This show of moderation on the part of the Tokyo government is noteworthy; even though it may prove to be of only local and temporary significance. For the moment, at least, Japan is biding her time and manifesting some interest in preservation of the status quo. To that end she recently suggested to the British, French and Italian envoys that their governments withdraw from China armed forces likely to cause "incidents" there.

Such a static policy may not, however, long be continued. There are powerful elements in Japan which favor an alliance with the axis powers. Those elements regard Italy's entry into the war and the subsequent collapse of France as a good opportunity for further aggrandizement of Japan. And for some time they have been denouncing the government for what they deem its week-kneed policy.

Already, in fact, a great hue and cry has been raised over the alleged dispatch to the Dutch East Indies of a small British force, the thinly veiled suggestion being that this act constitutes a violation of the status quo in southeastern Asia and may, therefore, provide Japan with an excuse to intervene. At the same time the Japanese army in south China has issued a statement declaring it was not able "to condone aid given Chiang Kai-shek by authorities of French Indo-China," namely, in permitting the dispatch over the Indo-Chinese railroad of supplies destined for the Chinese forces.

And the puppet government at Nanking has seized the occasion of Italy's entry into the war to demand that all troops, warships and other armed forces of European belligerents stationed in China be withdrawn. The voice may be the voice of Wang Ching-wei. The hand is obviously that of Tokyo.

Under these circumstances the moderate Tientsin settlement can be regarded only as a minor British gain in a situation which promises all manner of dangers.

Air Tragedies

The collision of two bombing planes within the limits of New York City yesterday took the lives of twelve Army fliers and destroyed two houses. It was only by a fortunate chance that no residents of the thickly populated areas in which the planes fell were killed or injured.

The causes of the accident may never be determined as there are no survivors and the planes have been consumed by fire. However, the fact that student officers recently called to Mitchel Field were undergoing tactical training suggests that the tragedy was due to inexperience on the part of the fliers. That conclusion is strengthened by reports of eyewitnesses.

Mayor LaGuardia refers to this tragedy as "one of the inevitable accidents of training." To a certain extent that comment is justifiable. But we can learn something from every accident and resolve to avoid unnecessary risks in the future. Certainly, in flights over crowded areas, maneuvers involving hazards to residents should be banned.

During the past few weeks a number of serious accidents involving Army and Navy planes have been reported. Six deaths and one injury resulted when an Army bomber crashed three weeks ago in California. A few days later a transport plane intended for the Navy crashed on a test flight, killing four employes of the firm which built the craft. Several days ago one of the bombers sold to the Allies narrowly escaped destruction in a forced landing.

It may be only a coincidence that so many air fatalities have taken place at a time when the air defense program is just getting under way. But one strongly suspects that the preparedness campaign has been a contributory factor. Under pressure to achieve quick results, there is danger that precaution may be relaxed with consequent needless sacrifice of lives.

Adequate preparation for defense in the air and adequate training for the youth called upon to operate planes is necessarily a work of time. Training may become somewhat more intensive with a view to reducing the period of preparation. But the experience that makes a man efficient in the air cannot be obtained by a process of cramming. To force the pace is to court disaster and actually to retard the upbuilding of a trained air personnel that can be relied upon in an emergency.

Auto Inspection

Supervising Inspector J. Earl Steinhauer reports that under Washington's compulsory vehicle inspection law 3,000 unsafe automobiles have been removed from the streets during the past year. Recent inspections indicate, moreover, that the law has made motorists more conscious of the need for repairing and replacing defective equipment. These results are a gratifying offset to the inconvenience which this statute caused District motorists in the first months of its operation.

Obviously it is impossible to estimate the number of accidents averted because of the compulsory inspection law. There is no doubt, however, that unsafe equipment makes for unsafe transportation. Instances in which loss of life or severe injury have been caused by faulty brakes, defective steering gear or improper lights are known to everyone. Moreover, there must be countless instances in which accidents seemingly due to careless driving have been made worse or indeed been caused by unsuspected mechanical defects.

The manager of an automobile club which opposes the inspection law maintains that accidents are caused "by faulty human head construction, not by faulty car construction." Mistakes of the head undoubtedly account for more accidents than faults of construction. But that does not make safe construction any less essential.

As the American Automobile Association points out, compulsory inspection must be "a definite part of any well-rounded traffic safety program."

Another thing that puzzles us is where the taxpayer gets all the money the politicians take away from him.

"Of 100 women, 11 are knock-kneed," reports a statistician, the old rascal.

Money, Men, Time

To the Editor of The Post —Sir: "Military equipment speedily becomes obsolete and excess production entails needless waste of money," quoting from your leading editorial in The Post of June 12.

What is wasting money? Certainly money that merely changes hands is not wasted. Money that finds its ways into the pockets of automobile mechanics, ore truck drivers, ore pick wielders is not wasted. Maybe their labor would be wasted. Shall we save the money to be handed out in doles to those who would be happier and healthier, more dependable in peacetime or war if they earned it? The money does not go anywhere. It merely finds circulation, the purpose for which it was invented and coined.

If we should produce a few hundred thousand planes, and train a million American youths to use them, we would be making a stride forward, whether one plane was used in war or ever needed for that purpose. The age of aviation is here, whether we like it or not, or even recognize it.

More than ten million man-days are now going to waste every setting of the sun, and that waste is of less importance than the harm done to the character of the ten million victims of idleness, idleness enforced by the miserly hiding of money where it is useless.

Let us put idle Americans to work on what may be needed to meet brutality made audacious by men who know not truth, justice, integrity, or mercy but who have found new uses for treachery, deception and wholesale murder. Let us no longer waste the one thing more valuable than money—time.

The Cause Of The War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Roosevelt let the cat out of the bag.

Whether he was aware of it or not, he put his finger on the basic causes of World War 2 when he spoke at the University of Virginia the other day. He correctly described it as an imperialistic war, a war for markets and raw materials: "This Government . . . expressed its willingness . . . to cooperate with the government of Italy . . . for the creation of a stable world order . . . which would assure to all powers equality of opportunity in the world's markets and in the securing of raw materials on equal terms."

I thought they were fighting for democracy. SEYMOUR ETKIN.

Defends Unions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Anyone reading the columns of Westbrook Pegler (to whom you graciously give space) would come to believe that all unions, craft and industrial, are rotten to the core.

The present and past history of the American labor movement is one of the brightest spots in the history of the American people. Each one of us owes a vote of thanks to all unions for their more than a hundred years' struggle to raise the standard of living of the American people. ANDY EICHS.

Peace Candidate

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last Friday evening I attended a peace meeting sponsored by a number of anti-interventionist organizations in connection with the anti-war mobilization. I was very pleasantly surprised to find that there were so many persons in Washington who had the same view as I have regarding the war hysteria now rampant. One of the speakers stated it well when he pointed out that this hysteria was merely the Administration's smoke screen to cover its inept treatment of domestic problems.

Until recently I felt that we could expect an antiwar candidate to run on the Republican platform, which would give that large majority of Americans who desire peace an opportunity to express their deep sentiments on this vital problem. With Vandenberg leaving the peace bloc, there is now no Republican candidate who is unequivocally opposed to war or the economic steps that lead toward war.

But at the peace meeting last Friday I did hear one of the Presidential candidates who impressed me as being a sincere opponent of war. His domestic policies sounded both wise and practicable, and I was convinced of the truth of his argument that a war "against fascism" would bring fascism here.

This antiwar candidate is Norman Thomas. The fact that he is running on the Socialist ticket does not scare me in the least. His platform is satisfactory and he has pledged to keep us out of war. That's all I ask of any candidate for President in 1940.

JOSEPH MURRAY.

Two Kinds Of Relief

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was with much anger I read the news story about the President's request for $50,000,000 for Allied war refugees to be included in the relief bill. Does this mean that the relief appropriation for our own needy will be cut correspondingly?

No talk about balancing the budget now—no, clear the way for our swift journey to European battlefields. But when youth asks for the passage of the American Youth Act, which would mean jobs for thousands of unemployed youth, they are none too politely told that the country can't afford such an expense. When passage of the Wagner health bill is urged, we're told there can't be money for both defense and the social needs of the people.

Yet, $50,000,000 (probably as a starter) for Allied war relief is a "concrete example of our inherent and decent generosity." Mr. President, tell me, why aren't you as decent and generous with the one-third of a nation you proclaimed was ill-fed, ill-housed, and ill-clothed? JUSTINE LANDER.
Washington, June 12.

The Income Tax

To the Editor of The Post —Sir: An editorial in The Post of June 14 advocates reduction of the income tax exemption on married persons by $700 or 28 per cent, but for unmarried persons you advocate a reduction of but $200 or 20 per cent.

May I call your attention to the fact that this discrimination against the institution of marriage would not be in accord with the American ideals. Let the tax fall equally. Do not penalize a man because he takes a wife and raises a family.

The lower middle-class family, which is the backbone of the Nation and which produces the young men who fight our wars, needs all the "breaks" it can get in order to survive. Please remember that with them two people and more have to live on the salary or wage of one person.

Be just to them. They bear the hardest burdens. They are "America." They look to Congress for fair treatment. MARRIED.
Kensington, Md., June 14.

Neutrality And Material Aid

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The various polls on public sentiment in this country indicate that the American people are overwhelmingly in favor of an Allied victory because they feel that their destiny is tied to such an eventuality. Should America refuse to assist in a material way?

(1) It is argued that assistance on our part in the form of military supplies would constitute a violation of our neutrality and would be a breach of international law. Technically, a transfer of our military supplies to private companies in exchange for new equipment, and the subsequent sale of the used equipment to the Allies by private agencies, is not a breach of international law.

(2) If it be contended that the above procedure is merely a subterfuge and that, in fact, our Government is selling supplies to one belligerent, the justification would be that Germany has violated her engagements with us and we are resorting to nonmilitary reprisals in retaliation against such illegal conduct. In the Kellogg-Briand peace pact Germany solemnly contracted with us that she would not resort to war as an instrument of national policy. Competent authorities on international law write as follows:

Prof. Quincy Wright: "Under the pact we are entitled to take appropriate measures to redress the wrong done to us by the pact violator."

Oppenheim, in his authoritative treatise on international law: "The guilty belligerent, by breaking the treaty, violates the rights of all the other signatories, who, by way of reprisals, may choose to subject him to measures of discrimination."

There is, then, no force in the contention that the release of military supplies for resale to any purchaser able and willing to pay for them is either a breach of international law or "equivalent to a declaration of war."

LEON SACHS.
Johns Hopkins University, June 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The action taken by the Navy Department in turning in to an airplane company aircraft of the United States Naval Reserve with the full knowledge that these aircraft would be resold to the Allies is unneutral and signifies that we have adopted a policy of nonbelligerency. The very fact that the airplanes formed part of our armed forces can only be interpreted as meaning that this Nation intends to render the Allies all possible aid.

It appears that the officials now directing American policy are either misleading the public or letting the desire to aid the Allies override their calm judgment.

It seems that we need some 6,000 aircraft for training purposes, and any we have in reserve or not in first-line service should be used for this purpose. If it is the intention of the Allies to use them for training purposes it would seem reasonable to believe that we could use them to overcome our own shortage in pilots.

Such transactions as this may weaken our own defensive position and make efforts to keep out of the conflict of no avail. Under the circumstances, an Allied defeat would leave us at the mercy of an invader. Consequently, once we have drawn upon our reserve stores we must continue to help the Allies to the hilt, and that means we must fight if they weaken.

If in the near future our rearmament program makes any materials available and our defense has been made invulnerable we might then send the Allies anything we can spare. JUSTIN.
Fredericksburg, Va., June 12.

New Naval Line-up?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is probable that the next few weeks will be the determining ones in Hitler's plans of world domination. England is naturally the focus of these plans and the French campaign a step to the invasion of the British Isles. Hitler well understands the vital need of naval power. In conquering France, he may obtain a first-class navy in a single stroke. It is interesting, therefore, to list the comparative strength of the combination of French and Italian sea power against the line-up of England. The August, 1939, listing of ships would be as follows:

	France, Italy	England
Battleships	12	15
Heavy cruisers	14	17
Submarines	167	54
Destroyers	125	158

It is seen, therefore, that without considering recent Allied naval losses Hitler's combined fleet could well meet the British in the North Sea and in combination with his planes force an issue. Should he succeed against Britain and add units of the British navy to his armada, he might well plan a control of the North Atlantic. Only the wealth in this country represented by our vast gold hoarding could pay off Hitler's military expenses and the North Atlantic is the road to this treasure.

Sterile Nation?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Dorothy Thompson and Mussolini agree.

In his recent speech Mussolini hinted that we were a sterile nation. Miss Thompson, in her column, said that we should open the doors of the nation for the immigration of foreign children because we were getting old.

Genealogy

My Aunt Alice was really one of the finest aunts a kid of 9 ever had—until Uncle William went into the junk business and made a lot of money. Of course, Aunt Alice insisted that he was not a junkman but was a machinery broker. But the fact of the matter was that Uncle William bought old machinery as junk and, at junk prices, and then sold it to small town manufacturers as second-hand machinery. So, much to the disgust of Aunt Alice, Uncle William was a junkman to us kids even after his fortune was estimated at close to the million mark.

After Uncle William made his pile Aunt Alice was never the same. Instead of spending her spare time making molasses candy and cake for us she became society-conscious and spent that time in trying to gain a place in the sun in Rhode Island society.

Knowing that our ancestors—Aunt Alice was my dad's sister—had been in this country since around the Revolutionary War, Aunt Alice decided that she must become a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, so she set about to prove her claim to that distinction.

For several months she pored over various books in the Providence Public Library and wrote letters to persons all over the country by the name of Shaw in an effort to find a missing link which would tie up our branch of the family with some male ancestor who served with glory—more or less—during the War of the Revolution. But, probably due to her inexperience and the inexperience of her helpful friends, she was never able to trace our family much beyond the Civil War, at which point she found that our mutual ancestor would have been in the Battle of Bull Run except for the fact that he had flat feet.

So finally, in despair, she hired a trained genealogist, at a nice fat fee, to trace our family tree for her.

The days and months that followed were exciting ones for us all. The genealogist, whose fee was based upon the hours spent in research, submitted frequent reports showing the progress of his search. Some reports made Aunt Alice very happy because they left off at a time when one of our ancestors had gained some renown in his field and added luster to the family record. Then would come a report which left her quite unhappy, because while her agent never traced our ancestors to prison or to the hangman's noose, he was sometimes so close to one or the other that poor Aunt Alice was beside herself for many days after the report was submitted to her. For us kids, of course, it was a real adventure, and we secretly hoped that the next report would show that one of our forebears had attained real greatness as a pirate or, at least, as a renowned bandit in the early days of our country.

Finally Uncle William decided that unless the search was brought to an end poor Aunt Alice would suffer a nervous breakdown. So he went to the genealogist and made him an offer of a substantial bonus if he would complete his report within a month.

For the following 30 days Aunt Alice was, to use an old New England phrase, "all a-twitter" with excitement. At last her dream was to be realized. At last she would, by virtue of her ancestors' greatness, be one of the leaders of Rhode Island society.

At last the happy day arrived and the genealogist brought his final report to Uncle William. Uncle William read it in silence and handed it to Aunt Alice. Aunt Alice read it and promptly swooned. The report had traced our ancestry in America back beyond the War of the Revolution.

But it also brought out that during that war our ancestors were Tories and were chased out of the country to Canada—where they stayed for the duration.

Dewey Cut Down

WOLCOTT GIBBS, who writes for the New Yorker, can trim the meat off your bones so deftly that nary a drop of blood is seen, and you are halfway home, a naked skeleton, before you notice that people are staring and begin to wonder if anything has been left unbuttoned. He and a collaborator, John Bainbridge, did such a job on Thomas E. Dewey in the issue of May 25, which, as journalistic surgery, must command the respect of any colleague and the awe of those cleaver-and-buck-saw butchers who cut a man up with woodsman's strokes and splatter gore and tripes all over the place. Mr. Gibbs and Mr. Bainbridge not only undressed Mr. Dewey down to his framework but disarticulated the bones and sent them up to the Speyer home for lost and abandoned dogs.

As surgery, I say this is a beautiful operation, and I will say, too, that public figures in a democracy having a free press should be able to take it, as I believe Dewey can. It takes the extra size out of souffle personalities, and I have thought that if Charles A. Lindbergh had not been declared a sacred cow back when his arrogance and superhuman feeling were mere knobs on his character, a small corrective operation would have done him good when the hurt wore off.

NEVERTHELESS, I submit that such a job as the boys have done on Dewey is likely to discourage any public servant and deter good men from entering public life with decent intentions and great ability.

What does a man have to do to win a cheer, anyway? Dewey cleaned up all the rackets in New York County except the labor rackets which have had the protection of political superstition and privilege, and he has even cleared up a number of dirty, criminal unions. If this was such an ordinary performance by an ordinary county prosecutor, why didn't some of his predecessors beat him to it instead of leaving such a slimy mess for him? And why doesn't Chicago, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Kansas City, or the two Miamis ever produce an ordinary man capable of a similar achievement?

Dewey has his vain affectations as the Messrs. Gibbs and Bainbridge don't fail to note, but who hasn't, and anyway, he did clean up the town, didn't he, and does anyone want to make anything out of that? It wasn't his fault that the crooks had spectacular underworld names which glamoured up the publicity and, if anybody should ask you, Dewey didn't prosecute Lucky Luciano merely as a merchant of Venus in a wholesale way of business as the public seems to believe, thanks to some careless writing and reading, but as a very bad and dangerous racketeer in various lines.

I AGREE that as a Presidential possibility Dewey is preposterous, and that his election would be a calamity which, happily, does not seem imminent. He just isn't enough man for the job of President, but, of that, his record and his personality do not suffer by comparison with those of some of the precocious New Deal juveniles of the campus, or Ivy League who have been turned loose in the engine rooms of the government with full authority to amuse themselves these last few years. He happens to be one of those one-gallus American country boys who took seriously the teacher's dictum that every little boy in the class had a chance to be President. Just for that they slay him, beautifully, I admit, but thoroughly.

I met a prominent statesman of the spectacular type a few months ago when he was down on his political luck, and suffering from a bad case of the mopes. He had been double-crossed in some painful situations and his press, once laudatory beyond his due, was now worse than he deserved. However, he was still popular and a master of the tricks and he said, not entirely in jest, "sometimes I think I will chuck it and turn demagogue just to get even. I could move into Los Angeles and become a Huey Long in two years." He could, for a fact.

I propose that when a man has done a good job he should get credit, not ridicule, lest eligible men of ability be totally excluded by the knowledge that the best they can hope for is ridicule, ingratitude and abuse.

Petain's Plea To Red Cross

'We Rely On Youth'

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS, its war relief fund passing the $12,000,000 mark, yesterday received a letter from Marshal Petain of France declaring, "We rely on you."

"God bless all of you who participate in this great work," Petain wrote.

At the same time Countess Barbara Haugwitz-Reventlow, Woolworth heiress, became the largest single contributor to the fund by adding a $100,000 check to her previous contribution of $10,000 to the New York Chapter.

Meanwhile, the District of Columbia Chapter announced Sunday night's "goal-to-go" mass meeting resulted yesterday in a spurt of gifts which brought the total to $254,850, well in sight of the $300,000 goal.

Petain Never Forgot 1918

NEVERTHELESS, France's difficulties mean "help is more desperately needed than ever before," District Chairman Bruce Baird declared in a statement issued by National Chairman Norman H. Davis. Davis said relief would continue in France "if the Red Cross is granted liberty of action in getting help to those for whom it is intended."

Marshal Petain declared he had "never forgotten the immense service rendered by the American Red Cross during the war of 1914-1918" and said the current effort "fills me with admiration and gratitude."

He continued that "thanks" to Germany, the world is "menaced with a great cataclysm" and "I can find no words to describe the great work and the admirable support given him (Chairman Davis) by the members of the American Red Cross."

Yesterday's receipts of the District Chapter amounted to $9,612 and included an anonymous gift of $4,500.

OTHER LARGE LOCAL gifts included those of Mr. and Mrs. William Wade Henshaw, $1,000; Miss Esther van der Graft, $300; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, her monthly $100; Miss Julia Boit, a second contribution of $100; Washington Hebrew Congregation, $100; Eastern Building & Loan Association, $100, and Capital Transit Co., $500.

The Takoma branch of the District Chapter will present "Takoma Talent," a musical and dancing revue, at 8 p. m. today at Presbyterian Church Hall, Maple and Tulip streets, Takoma Park, Md.

Mrs. Albert G. Scott, chairman of the entertainment committee, will be assisted by Mrs. Albert L. Lingle, branch chairman, and Mrs. Douglas Clarke, vice chairman.

Levin to Represent Md. At G. O. P. Convention

Baltimore, June 17 (AP).—Harry O. Levin, State tax commission chairman, will represent Maryland when the Republican National Committee meets in Philadelphia Wednesday to decide contests over election of convention delegates.

The Poolesville (Md.), Chapter, Future Farmers of America, has elected William Luhn, president; Robert Gray, vice president; Claude Bourne, and Harold Thompson, treasurer, for the next school year.

Today And Tomorrow

Our Situation

THE SITUATION of the United States is now as follows:

The capitulation of the French army may mean, even before these lines are printed, that the French navy has been surrendered to Hitler. It is certain to mean that whether France is occupied as a conquered province under the Nazi regime or whether it is permitted to maintain a nominal independence under some sort of French government, the French Empire in North Africa, on the West Coast of Africa, in Asia, and the French possessions in this hemisphere, will be governed from Berlin. There is no power left in France capable of resisting any demand which Berlin may make.

With the French navy surrendered, trapped, or conceivably scuttled, with the whole of France, Spain, and North Africa as a base of operations, the combined German and Italian naval, air and land power will be available for the blockade, the bombing and the invasion of the British Isles. How effectively the British can resist this assault is a question. How much they will be willing to resist is an equally serious question. If, as may soon be the case, the British find themselves tomorrow, as the French found themselves yesterday, confronted with overwhelming force in Europe and without hope of full and effective assistance from the United States even if they resist, the British too may capitulate. In that event whatever part of the British navy is not sunk in battle, is not scuttled, and does not escape to Canada and to the Far East, will fall into Hitler's hands. The British shipyards, the largest in the world, will fall into his hands. The British naval bases in Europe and in Africa will fall into his hands. Whatever government there is in the British Isles will either be a Nazi government or a puppet government under orders from Berlin.

The question that will remain is whether there can exist an independent British government in the Dominions of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, in the Crown Colonies of Bermuda, Jamaica and the like, and an independent Irish State. This question is of paramount importance to the United States. For if the British and French fleets fall to Hitler and if the British and French empires in this hemisphere, and on the shores of both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, become subject to his orders, the United States will be isolated completely.

THIS SITUATION cannot be averted by promises that we shall eventually provide the British with aeroplanes under the cash and carry provisions of the Neutrality Law. The President made that promise to M. Reynaud. It was insufficient. The Reynaud government fell and France capitulated. The same promise made to Great Britain will have no better result. The fatal defect of the promise was not merely that it offered France no real assistance immediately but, more fundamentally, that it did not offer the French nation a sufficient reason to hope for an eventual liberation if they endured the punishment which further resistance entailed.

In the case of Great Britain further resistance is possible, in a sense in which it was not possible to France, first, because the British Isles can still be defended, and second, because the greater part of the British Empire—the Dominions and the Crown Colonies—are beyond the immediate reach of Hitler's army. They will come within his immediate reach only if the British fleet is captured and the British crown, which is the center of the allegiance of the empire, is destroyed or made vassal to Hitler.

In order to sustain the resistance of the British Isles, in order to provide a sufficient reason why the British fleet should in the final stage take refuge in this hemisphere, in order to insure continuing independence from Hitler's control of the Dominions and of the Crown Colonies in this hemisphere or within striking distance of it, a deeper commitment than that offered to M. Reynaud would be required. It would be necessary to enter into specific arrangements with London and with Ottawa covering the character of the assistance we are willing to give and providing for the specific measures of protection which we are willing to undertake in the Atlantic Ocean and as respects the Dominions and the Crown Colonies.

THE PRESIDENT does not have the authority to enter into such arrangements. The United States is, therefore, in a position where for lack of authority in its government it is unable to take any steps to safeguard its elementary security. It the people understand the situation, they will almost certainly wish to take the necessary steps. For by this time, the French army having surrendered, it must be evident to everyone that the question for us is not whether we shall send an army to Europe, but whether we shall use our naval, air, economic and political power to prevent Hitler from obtaining command of the Atlantic Ocean.

The necessary authority to deal with this imminent possibility can be obtained only by the declaration of an absolute party truce, by calling in at once the leaders of both parties in Congress and outside Congress, by laying the whole problem before the representatives of the people and requiring them to take the necessary decisions together as patriots and to share henceforth the responsibility. In a situation of such profound gravity, it is inadmissible that any other consideration—as to a third term or as to this or that Republican candidate's chances or as to anything else—should paralyze the United States government.

Yet the fact is that at the most critical moment in modern history the United States government is paralyzed by the division of authority between Congress and the President and by partisan politics. If the paralysis is allowed to continue and if the vital interests of the United States are fatally impaired, the American people will never forgive the politicians who failed them in their hour of need.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Creed For A Crisis

I believe in the United States of America, the ultimate wisdom and good sense of the American people and the traditional toughness of Uncle Sam, once he leaves the piano and rolls up his sleeves.

I believe that America is getting its eyes open with satisfactory speed, considering the diet it has been on for so many years.

I believe that what has happened in Europe has completely aroused it to a full realization that a nation cannot be perpetuated on pap; that a country cannot endure solely on microphone broadcasts and that a democracy cannot survive on a program of easy living.

I believe that millions of Americans whose chief thought was what they could get out of Uncle Sam has abruptly changed to the thought, "What can I do for the old boy?"

I believe that while Uncle Sam has grown soft, double-chinned, a bit muddled and luxury loving, he still has the stuff of Concord Bridge, Bunker Hill and Valley Forge in him and can work himself back into ring condition with amazing speed, if permitted to get off the applesauce diet.

I believe nothing is the matter with him that can't be cured by the immediate mustering out of the psychoanalysts, patent medicine men, soothsayers and handholders who have thought a musical score and some good lyrics were more important than an hour a day at the woodpile.

I believe Uncle Sam began as a fighter, achieved his first distinction as a fighter and became great as a fighter, and that there is still plenty of fight in him.

I believe his chances are greatly enhanced by a growing ability of the country, when watching a fighter get into condition, to tell the difference between a dancing instructor and the boxing instructor.

I believe that while he has traitors living downstairs, spies living upstairs, sabotage experts living in the attic and double-crossers under the bed, he suddenly recognized 'em through their false whiskers and will stop the monkey business before it is too late.

I believe that while he has seemed soft, silly, somnambulistic, sophomoric and slushy for a long time he can get hard, smart, alert, adult and fit faster than anybody on earth.

I believe that even under seven years of paternalism and petting he has never grown as soft as he looked.

I believe that, despite the shape he is in, he can still make the Fifth Columnists think they are being shaved by a buzzsaw.

I believe he is definitely opposed to baloney as a diet and has gone in strictly for raw meat and plenty of green vegetables.

I believe that, with an instinct that has been his since Paul Revere's ride, he has an ability to tell his enemies from his friends and sound advice from radio static.

I believe he sees the job ahead, knows the danger, realizes the folly of false moves and appreciates the importance of starting nothing that he can't finish.

I believe he has a rendezvous with Destiny, knows he is a little late, but will get there in time, fit and ready.

Greater Emergency

Compulsory Training

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., June 17.—Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State in the Hoover Cabinet and Secretary of War during the Taft Administration, said at a meeting on the Yale campus today that the United States was facing "a far greater emergency" than it did in the World War. The meeting adopted a resolution advocating compulsory military training.

It was a last minute addition to Yale's commencement program, called at the request of the Military Training Camps Association.

Stimson, declaring a German victory would give that nation six times the shipbuilding capacity of the United States, said there was need for compulsory military training "which is immediate, necessary, fair and intelligent."

The United States, he said, was able to prepare for the World War "carefully and leisurely. There was no need for hurry.

"Consider what a different situation we face now. The Allies are being defeated. It is a grave question whether the fleets will actually continue to exist. We have a one-ocean Navy."

No Nazi Declaration

Berlin, June 17 (AP). (By Radio).—An official spokesman said today an official German declaration regarding the attitude of the United States toward the European war was not available. He answered queries of foreign correspondents.

It was said it was not officially known whether the United States should be considered neutral or nonbelligerent. Moreover, it was said, President Roosevelt himself has declined to answer such a question.

A broadcast said "the impression certainly does not prevail that official circles here are much interested in solving" the problem of the exact status of the United States."

Urges Annihilation of Bunds

Minneapolis, June 17 (AP).—Bennett O. Knudson, Albert Lea, Minn., president of Kiwanis International, told the opening session of 4,500 delegates and visitors to the international convention today that this country, "if called upon to do so, will exhaust its entire strength in defense of Canada and democracy."

"Democracies are slow to act, but in the United States today we have the largest proportion of citizens ready to fight to defend their liberty than at any previous time in our country's defense," he declared.

He spoke of an unwritten alliance between the United States and Canada, and called for the "annihilation of fifth columnists—"immediate action . . . for complete dissolution" of communistic, bund and fascist organizations.

Pharmacist Is Named To Salisbury Council

Salisbury, Md., June 17 (AP).—A three-week deadlock over choice of a successor for Mayor I. Virgil Hitchens' council post was broken today with appointment of Albin A. Hayman.

Hayman, a Salisbury pharmacist, was named by a three-to-one vote to the post vacated by Hitchens when he became mayor.

French Colonies

Problem for U. S.

Fading of French resistance yesterday focused attention of the United States Government on a cluster of Caribbean islands, two barren rocks in the North Atlantic and a steamy stretch of South American mainland as big as Virginia.

These are the French colonies in the Western Hemisphere—secondary in economic importance but high in strategic value. Their future, Secretary Hull told reporters yesterday, is under close study at the State Department.

Any German attempt to seize control of French possessions in the New World, it was said here, would clash immediately with American policy, as laid down in the Monroe Doctrine and underlined in the Pittman-Bloom resolution, unanimously approved by the Senate yesterday.

What worries American diplomats and defense experts is not any threat of physical occupation of the colonies by Hitler's troops but the prospect that nominal control by the postwar French government might mask Nazi penetration.

The immediate problem posed by the French colonies is more serious than that of the Dutch holdings in the West Indies and South America, according to officials here, since the Netherlands government is intact in England and exercising control over its overseas empire, while indications are that the French will be forced to sign peace terms and install a government acceptable to the Nazis.

France's American colonies, remnants of what was once a vast New World empire, are scattered from Newfoundland to the equator.

Within sight of the south Newfoundland coast are two bleak and sparsely populated island groups, St. Pierre and Miquelon, whose geographic position gives the Canadian government a vital interest in their fate. In Ottawa yesterday, according to the Associated Press, official quarters predicted that the status of the islands would be the subject of consultation between the Canadian and United States governments if France makes peace with Germany.

The islands have passed from French to British and back to French hands four times in the last 300 years. Chief economic importance of the islands is their proximity to the cod fishing banks, though they enjoyed great prosperity as warehouses for the North Atlantic rum-running fleet in the prohibition era.

There is no first-class harbor in the islands, but shelter is available for small vessels and seaplanes. They are connected by cable with Europe and North America.

French West Indian colonies are located in the island group known as the Lesser Antilles, an arc of British and French possessions curving from Puerto Rico to the South American mainland and flanking the eastern approach to the Panama Canal.

Richest of the French West Indian colonies are Guadeloupe and its tiny satellite islands, supporting a population of more than 300,000, with a flourishing trade in sugar, bananas, rum, coffee and cocoa. Pointe-a-Pitre, on the main island, is one of the best harbors in the West Indies.

Martinique, 100 miles south of Guadeloupe, is the site of important cable and radio stations and one fortified harbor, Fort de France. Its economy is similar to that of Guadeloupe. The island was the birthplace of the French Empress Josephine and the scene of the disastrous eruption of Mt. Pelee in 1902, which destroyed the city of St. Pierre and took 40,000 lives.

Bordering Brazil and within two hours flight of the Amazon delta is French Guiana, mantled with dense jungle and split by a dozen rivers which rise in the mountains and empty into the Atlantic. Placer gold mining is the colony's most important industry, but the territory has important undeveloped timber and agricultural resources. The colony's chief notoriety comes from the Devil's Island penal colony off its coast.

One of the French Pacific possessions might figure in American "hemispheric defense" plans—the uninhabited Island of Clipperton, 800 miles west of the Mexican coast. The island is believed to be capable of development as a seaplane base.

Building Speeded to Make Room for Defense Agencies

By Edward Ryan

A speed-up in Government building construction was being sought yesterday to make more room for expanding defense agencies.

Officials of the Public Buildings Administration, it was learned, had started conferences with contractors in the hope of pushing ahead the opening date of the new Social Security and Railroad Retirement Buildings in Southwest Washington.

The buildings, at Third and Independence avenue southwest, are scheduled now to open around January 1, 1941. This is about six months ahead of the date when the new War Department Building at Twenty-first and New York avenue northwest is expected to be ready.

Pressure from the defense agencies to find more room for their working staffs already has sent rumors through the Public Buildings agency that there might come an attempt to take over all or parts of the new southwest offices for defense personnel.

These rumors are getting a short welcome, and it is thought the drive to speed completion of the Social Security-Railroad Retirement group will operate in a more roundabout way to help the defense agencies.

Employes of these agencies are now scattered in half a dozen buildings in northwest Washington, several of them close enough to the War and Navy Department headquarters to be easily used for overflow of personnel.

War Department employes, officials said, have already spread to Temporary Building No. 2, at Nineteenth and C streets northwest, and into a rented warehouse at First and M streets northeast, until last week used mostly by the District census staff.

In addition to spreading out, the War Department will shortly start building upward. Bids are to be opened July 2 for construction of a one-story addition to the munitions Building, covering 14 of its 15 wings.

President Roosevelt yesterday signed a bill amending the Federal Credit Union Act to boost the legal limit for unsecured loans to members from $50 to $100.

Officials of the Farm Credit Administration said that the measure would give more liberal loan facilities to about 35,000 residents of the District and nearby who are members of 83 local Federal credit unions.

The amendment, officials said, had been made possible partly because of the low volume of losses on loans.

The Best Man?

By Mark Sullivan

Hoover's Stock Is Rising

WHEN THIS CAMPAIGN year was very young, as long ago as last January, a survey was made of the Republican Presidential material. This listing of Republican possibilities, their qualifications and their chances, was made by a shrewd and experienced observer of the political scene, detached and impartial, Mr. Robert Moses, head of the New York park system. His survey, published in the Saturday Evening Post, was as simply clinical as that of a scientist. It was as intelligent and comprehensive an appraisal of Republican timber as anyone could make, at a time six months ahead of the convention.

What Mr. Moses said about the possibilities then beginning to emerge—Mr. Dewey, Senator Taft, Senator Vandenberg and the others—is not pertinent to this article. But there is striking interest in what this survey said about one who, at that time, was regarded as not a possibility:

"Mr. Hoover comes much closer to real leadership. . . . It is altogether unlikely that he could be nomination—which I am sure is not the case—and equally improbable that he could be elected. Nevertheless, he has a tremendous hold on influential people and his is by all odds the most intelligent, the most patriotic and the best equipped mind in the (Republican) party today. No one who has seen Mr. Hoover in a group discussing pubic affairs, national or international, can question his extraordinary background and equipment. It is, in many respects, a tragedy that he is not himself available, but this constitutes no earthly reason why he should not be enormously influential in the party deliberations."

That judgment about Mr. Hoover was general. Of all the combinations of words uttered in the United States during the past six months, there were two in the world of politics that were outstanding. One, having to do with the Democratic nomination, was: "Will he try for a third term?" The other, having to do with the Republican nomination was: "Of course Mr. Hoover is the best equipped man, but——" Those words must have been uttered millions of times.

Yet, recently, during May and June, there has been an upsurge of sentiment for Mr. Hoover, increased talk of him by party leaders, and by thoughtful persons generally. The talk increases as the convention comes near.

To recite this as merely a striking contrast—between what was, six months ago, and what is, today—would be a superfluity. There are many such changes. These six months past, perhaps more than any six months in recorded history, have shaken men loose from their servitude to the familiar, have compelled them to believe the incredible. How many in America last January thought by June America would be staring at the possibility of German conquest over France and Britain—and that we would be arming against the consequences of such a conquest to America itself? How many thought that the swastika would be waving over the Eiffel Tower? Millions, practically everybody in America, who last January, and for a century before, took the British fleet for granted, almost as they took the ocean for granted, are today obliged to adjust themselves to seeing that, upon America, the effect of the loss of the British fleet would be almost like the drying up of the ocean.

In this very field of American politics, there is another six months change, almost as striking as the emergence of Mr. Hoover. Last January, hardly one human being—and it is not necessary to make an exception of the one most concerned—thought that by June a man theretofore obscure, Mr. Wendell Willkie, would figure as a serious Presidential possibility.

HOW FAR THE MOVEMENT toward Mr. Hoover will go, no one can say. The Republican nomination is in the disposition of a thousand persons, who will compose the Republican Convention next week. It is one of the freest, most uncommitted, most unled conventions that ever met. Hardly more than a hundred out of the thousand persons are legally committed to any candidate as the result of the primaries, and even such commitments by direct primaries are not meant to be permanently binding. The thousand persons who compose the Republican Convention will do what seems to them best when they come together.

About Mr. Hoover as a possibility, one thing can be said. In proportion as the problems ahead are difficult and complex in proportion as the country faces crisis, the disposition, and the obligation, to nominate the best man becomes stronger. More and more, Republicans ask themselves: "If we have one man best equipped to be President, what reason can we give for not nominating him?"

True, the practically universal assent that Mr. Hoover is the best man for President, has frequently been accompanied by a question whether he would be the best candidate, whether he could be elected as readily as some others. This doubt of Mr. Hoover's strength as a candidate was the "but——" that was the usual argument against nominating him.

Yet, in a period of change and reversal in many areas of life, a period including tremendous movements of mass thought, and a period when these shifts of mass feeling are often unnoticed until they emerge—in such a time, maybe there has been a change in what we are here discussing. Maybe the reasons, including the prejudice among some groups, which were supposed to operate against Mr. Hoover as a candidate—maybe there has been change here too.

The 'Majors' Step Out In Defiance of 'Hard Times'

Production Schedules Belie Calamity Howlers; The Theater Guild Catalogues 'New Faces;' This, That and the Other About the Theater

DESPITE THE BLASTING blitzkriegs of the Hideous Hitler, the loss of a large proportion of its foreign market and the threat of both court and legislative action against it in this country, Hollywood seems to be doing all right for itself.

BELL

Out of the welter of spring and early summer sales conventions, the "majors" of the motion picture industry emerge with production programs for 1940-41 that reveal none of the wear and tear the studios purport to be suffering. The Warner Brothers bob up with the announcement of 48 features and two "specials," not to mention goodness knows how many short subjects; Columbia with 44 features, 16 "Westerns" and four serials and 130 short-reel releases; Republic with 58 features and Paramount with 44 feature-length productions, at least three of which will be in Technicolor. More or less already has been set down here regarding the output of Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, United Artists and many of the rest.

All of these factual disclosures are entangled in a maze of adjectival embroidery in the companies' brochures. Through all this lacey verbiage, however, two significant statements peek out boldly. One is that Paramount has definitely abandoned the making of "B" pictures and henceforth will devote its energies and resources exclusively to "A" product; the other, that in the face of all the industry's pessimism, Columbia is surpassing any season's product in the history of the company, both in number of releases and budget appropriations.

And that's the way it goes.

In the meantime, Universal makes known that with a half-year net of $1,381,002 it has scored an 87 per cent gain in income. That extra $2 must be the luxury tax! At any rate, the present financial status of the company represents a happy culmination of a two-year battle for Universal rehabilitation. You can blame a great deal of it on Deanna Durbin, the youthful "queen" of the Universal lot, who hasn't yet found out what it's like to appear in a box office flop.

From the opposite seaboard, the Theater Guild hails the season when new and comparatively strange faces gravitate to the East to wangle their way into Broadway productions for next year—their bankrolls, talents and Fates being propitious. The Guild's statistical wizards have figured out that these embryonic stars divide themselves about as follows: 10 per cent, character actors who have not been on Broadway for many years; 30 per cent, graduates of dramatic schools and summer theaters; 20 per cent, Hollywood actors with only motion picture and West Coast stock experience; 35 per cent, performers who have played "bits" on Broadway or have been "walk-ons" in New York productions; 5 per cent, from college dramatic societies, without any additional experience. Yeah, hope springs eternal.

There will be no late public preview tonight of "The Wandering Jew," next attraction at the Little Theater. The double-feature bill of "The Mill on the Floss" and "Les Miserables" will continue uninterrupted through tonight's regulary scheduled performances, with first showings of "The Wandering Jew" tomorrow morning.

But if an early-week first-run is something you have to have, you can find it at the Metropolitan, where Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier, stars, respectively, of "Gone With the Wind" and "Rebecca," open on the screen this morning in "Twenty-one Days Together." The play is based on a Galsworthy love story, "The First and the Last," and deals with the events of three weeks during which an innocent man is on trial for murder. A "study in suspenseful emotion" is what the boys are calling it.

Those two indefatigable Baltimoreans are at it again. Norman Clark, drama critic, and Louis E. Shecter, advertising executive, have gone and written themselves another play, called "She Ate Her Cake." Producer Ronald Hammond has bought it for presentation at Stony Creek, preliminary to a Broadway production in the autumn. In 1939, the same authors' "Window Shopping" had a short stay on Broadway, with George Sidney in the lead.

"The Cabin Kids," famous on stage, screen and radio, will begin a round of the Lust suburban houses today. They are the Negro juveniles, ranging in age from 8 to 15, who appeared with Bing Crosby and W. C. Fields in "Mississippi" and with both Rudy Vallee and Paul Whiteman on the air. They will be at the Milo, Rockville, today and tomorrow; the Marlboro on Thursday and Friday; Cameo, Mount Rainier, Friday, and at the Bethesda on Saturday.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 17.

The reason Joan Crawford is spending so much time in New York is that she's really serious about doing a play back there . . . Irene Hervey and Alan Jones are wanted by Andrew Stone at Paramount for "There's Magic in Music," but the execs over there fear that the love interest will be lessened because they're married, and I fear the exces are right . . . Can you imagine teaching the Ritz Brothers to speak Spanish? Yes, sir, they're trying to learn—because they have a job in a night club in Rio de Janeiro.

HOPPER

There's a deal on between Metro and Warners to have Paul Muni do "Simon Bolivar," with Johnny Considine producing.

"Remember how Irene Dunne aged to age for her art? But it's new when a dog does it. Laddie, in Vic McLaglen's next picture, has to age 10 years. So they're adding ten pounds to his weight, dulling his coat, and slowing his gait. And they call that art.

It just doesn't seem possible that P. G. Wodehouse, one of the most prolific comedy writers, could now be in the hands of the Germans. His wit is the chuckly—not belly-laughing caliber. Last time I saw him, I went to a swimming party at his house. There on a stone wall beside the pool was a whole row of bees, drying themselves and struggling to walk. And when I asked why, "Plumey" said, "The foolish things mistook my pool for honey. It's taken me two hours of diving to rescue them and dry them out."

If permitted to work under Mr. Hitler's cramped regime, he'll undoubtedly write the only amusing account of the war similar to Bruce Bairnsfather's sketches of the last war.

The passing of Florence Roberts, grandmother of the Jones Family, means the end of those pictures. Before the last one, Father Jed Prouty stepped out—wanted pay increase. Spring Byington, one of our best comediennes, asked for her release. She was typed as Mother Jones—other studios forgot to give her jobs. But we'll all miss Florence Roberts.

My radio program sponsors will be delighted at a scene in "Strike Up the Band" when Judy Garland sings to a dish of fruit, which suddenly turns into an orchestra—half an orange becomes a drum. Quaint idea, what?

Anyhow, There Are No Ghosts Here—Hope Hopes!

PAULETTE GODDARD AND BOB HOPE pack a trunk with laughs in one of the more amusing scenes in Paramount's production of "The Ghost Breakers," opening Friday on the screen at the Earle Theater. SOCIAL NOTES: U. S. Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy and Jim Moriarity, the famed host who now operates the Barberry Room, resemble each other very much. When Murphy went to the Philippines, Moriarity became accustomed to having people tell him: "We enjoyed seeing you in Manila," and Jim never would disillusion them . . . When Murphy became Governor of Michigan, Moriarity would acknowledge greetings from strangers who called him Frank, and spoke to him about Detroit. And when Murphy became the Attorney General, Moriarity soon found strangers talking to him about Washington affairs . . . But when his double was elevated to the Supreme Court bench, Moriarity decided no longer to permit this mistaken identity, and immediately corrected any impression that he was Murphy. Now, however, he is willing to continue the fiction, for he learned that when two men told Murphy: "Hello, Jim. How's the Barberry Room?" the jurist answered: "Fine. Just fine."

RADIO DEPT.: Jimmy Durante finally has consented to appear on "Information Please," June 25. He spoke to Dan Golenpaul, producer of the program, and suggested, confidentially, that he be apprised of some questions which would be asked during the program . . . "Oh, no—we never do that," Golenpaul informed. "You're going to be surprised" . . . "Oh, yeah?" replied Durante—displaying a World Almanac he was carrying. "YOU'RE going to be surprised."

MOVIE DEPT.: Paul Strand, the cameraman, is completing a full-length documentary film on civil liberties. The tentative title is "Native Land." Marc Blitzstein, who won a Guggenheim fellowship this year, will write the music . . . An unusual note will be introduced into the production, in the form of a lyric commentator, who will sing and talk. This job will be done by Paul Robeson.

MUSIC DEPT.: Paul Whiteman went to Hollywood to appear in the Mickey Rooney movie, "Strike Up the Band." On the first day of shooting, Whiteman blew up in his lines, and raged at himself: "Why did I come here, in another man's racket? I do all right in my business, but now I come out here and try another man's racket. Did I need it?" . . . "Okay, Paul, let's try the scene again," the director urged . . . Whiteman turned to the director, and said: "Look, can you do this—beat out four beats with your right foot, and off-beat with your left, two to a bar with your right hand, and one-two a bar with your left?" Whiteman sat down, and did all this. The director confessed his inability to do it. "I thought so," was Whiteman's consolation. "Another man's racket."

BUSINESS DEPT.: An employe working for the Bureau of Standards in Washington rushed feverishly from his office and announced: "Success—after 20 years of experimentation" . . . "Good," he was congratulated. "And what have you found? . . . "After 20 years," he gasped, excitedly, "I've found a cheap substitute for water."

LOCAL NEWS: The Typographical Union, which was suspended by the A. F. of L., will return shortly . . . The Colonial Trust Co. will be the new registrar for Associated Gas & Elec., succeeding the Transfer & Paying Agency—which was owned by H. C. Hopson's three sisters . . . Mrs. Vincent Sheean returned from England last week, via Montreal . . . The Saturday Evening Post is preparing an article about Michael Todd, the World's Fair impresario . . . Robert Hutchins, the educator, didn't get the Washington job offered to him, because he wanted, as an inducement, a promise that the highest appointive post in America would be given to him, when the vacancy occurs.

POLITICS DEPT.: One of the reasons for the transfer, under reorganization, of the Civil Aeronautics Authority to the Department of Commerce was a conflict of ruling power. This conflict dated from the birth of CAA . . . When the CAA was first created, the President invited Ed Noble to Hyde Park, and asked him to head the Authority. Roosevelt admitted that he was a bit puzzled—in that he wasn't quite sure whether the chairman or the administrators would have the ruling power. The President had studied the act which created CAA, but it was ambiguous in that detail . . . Tommy Corcoran was asked to read the act, and he agreed that it wasn't clear. They decided to designate Noble as chairman—but the power question never was settled.

EMPLOYMENT DEPT.: Abe Lyman's orchestra opened at Billy Rose's Barbary Coast, at the World's Fair. The weather was bad, and not enough visitors came to the Fair. Rose wanted to dispense with Lyman's services—but a dispute arose concerning the interpretation of their contract. Billy erected a bandstand at the bar, and moved the orchestra there—but Lyman still refused to terminate the contract. "I started playing in a barroom 20 years ago," the adamant bandleader insisted, "and now I'm back in a barroom again. Who knows? History repeats itself—they say."

Breezy Farce Scores Hit at Cross Roads

'Meet the Wife' Opens Season in Virginia Haymow

By Nelson B. Bell

Favored with a low temperature and a low, but rainless, sky, the Cross Roads Theater, over yonder at Bailey's Cross Roads, in Virginia, last night opened its summer season of pastoral drama with a revival of Lynn Starling's three-act comedy, "Meet the Wife," and scored a laughing hit with an audience that filled the refurbished and freshened hayloft.

"Meet the Wife" comes as another "Enoch Arden" yarn in a season that has been prolific in them on the screen. A good many years back, it served as a lively and inconsequential vehicle for the frivolous talents of Mary Boland, Clifton Webb and Roland Young—if memory serves correctly beyond the name of Miss Boland. Its lines and situations are not quite in the tempo of modern domestic farces, but they proved last night that they retain a fair measure of their original wallop and that audiences still react hilariously to the spectacle of both ladies and gentlemen in distrees, regardless of the idiom in which their discomfiture is expressed.

The three acts were rattled off last evening in high spirit and high speed by as able a cast as the Cross Roads ever has mustered. The performance was letter-perfect, tastefully staged in a single setting and costumed with an eye to the breezy humor of the evening.

Two Stellar Performances

In the Mary Boland role of Gertrude Lennox, who discovers that she is hostess to her supposedly dead first husband when she invites Phillip Lord, famous "English" author, to her home as a house guest, Catharine Ryan sparked the entire action with a spontaneity that set a swift pace for the others in the cast—but not too swift for Forney Reese, Peggy Johnston, William Draper and Burt Coleman to match. As the harassed second husband, Mr. Reese turned in one of the his most facile performances, lending the eloquence of both gesture and facial expression to a finely effective reading of the lines. Rand Gardner seemed a bit conscious of Phillip Lord's frock coat, grayed hair and lined face, but nevertheless made it apparent that a few more performances will loosen the restraint under which he seemed to be playing. Miss Johnston, Mr. Draper and Mr. Coleman were only a shade away from the vigorously effective comic portrayals contributed by Miss Ryan and Mr. Reese.

Howard F. Wentworth's direction created and consistently maintained the nice balance and exhilarated tempo that had so much to do with the audience's obvious enjoyment. There were times when the applause should have been audible in Washington.

"Meet the Wife" will be the bill at the Cross Roads for two weeks. It bids fair to be one of the most popular inaugurals the old red barn has ever had.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

(While Louella O. Parsons is on her Honolulu vacation, this column is being written by her daughter, Harriett Parsons, producer of Screen Snapshots.)

Hollywood, June 17 (INS).—Instead of "Down Argentine Way," Alice Faye will be "Down on the Wabash" as soon as she's able to work. "Wabash" will do for trotting races what "Kentucky" did for running races and "Maryland" for the steeplechase. Alice will have three Academy Award winners to support her, in case she's still feeling wobbly. They're Fay Bainter, Walter Brennan and Hattie MacDaniel. Brenda Joyce and John Payne will also be in the cast.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Young Payne seems to be doing a great deal better at Twentieth Century-Fox than he did at Warners. Zanuck is obviously sold on his value as a leading man. Apparently Darryl also liked the combination of Payne, Joyce and Brennan in "Maryland," recently sneak previewed.

If you are still following the dizzy saga of Orson Welles in Hollywood, you can put Ruth Warrick down as the dark horse (or should I say brunette filly?) who will probably play the lead in "Citizen Kane." With all the secretiveness of Charlie Chan, the boy genius had the tall, refined, Irene Dunne-ish actress fly to the Coast last week and make tests. Henry Wilcoxson has also been testing for the second male lead and Gregg Toland has been definitely set to boss the cameras. Looks as if Orson aint horsin' this time.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Rose Hobart, who came back to the screen with a bang in "Susan and God," will shortly divorce her New York chemist husband, William Grosvenor, jr. They were wed in 1932 . . . Adele Astaire, sis to Fred and Lady Cavendish to mugs like you and me, is in Ireland on his way to America—Fay Holdera of the Hardy series is worried sick about her 21-year-old brother, Bill, who's somewhere in France. She hasn't been able to get word to or from him; recent cafe couples: Ken Murray and June Duprez, at the Pirates' Den, Laura Hope Crews and Edgar Allan Woolf, at the same spot, Ann Sheridan and George Brent, at the Hollywood Tropics, Billie Burke dancing the Dutch rhumba son, at the Beverly Hills with son-in-law Bill Stephen-Hotel, where he teaches terpsichorean routines.

Meanwhile you'll have to put up with me. (I hope.)

Work Essential To Maintain Lost Weight

Woman of 60 Who Lost 88 Pounds Has Right System

By Ida Jean Kain

THIS will serve notice on all reducers and would-be reducers that a great deal more is expected of them than heretofore. If a woman of 60 can stick to a diet until she loses almost 90 pounds, and can adhere to an unbroken rule of exercise every day, there seems to be little excuse for the average overweight dallying around with her slimming program.

Mrs. H.'s letter to me sounded almost too good to be true. She said, "I was 61 in May and I have lost 88 pounds, bringing my weight down from 256 pounds. Everyone who knew me when I was stout just marvels. I look ten years younger, and, I might add, there are plenty of women of 50 who do not look as young as I do."

Before passing along this story of life beginning at 60, it seemed to me that a better acquaintance with Mrs. H. might be in order. So I wrote, asking for an appointment the first chance I had to get out her way. Although Mrs. H. lives in a nearby town in New Jersey, it didn't occur to me that she was a frequent visitor to New York.

Stopped By

But a few days later she dropped by to see me. She was in the city for the afternoon anyway and wanted to save me the trip! If anything, her letter was an understatement. She has all the sparkle, energy and the general appearance of a woman much younger than she declares she is. Her story should be a real inspiration to you.

Besides following a carefully planned diet that allowed for a slow but steady loss of weight, she had exercised for half an hour every morning. "Because I realized that in losing so much fat the muscles and organs of the body would be left weak, so I started exercising to strengthen them." And when she exercised, she didn't just go through the motions with an eye on the clock! As she says, "You don't get much out of exercise unless you really put your mind to it, and I worked."

As a result of this undeviating program of calisthenics suited to her problems, Mrs. H. reduced in size from a 50—and sometimes a 52—to a size 20! One of her greatest thrills is in shopping for clothes.

Danger of Sagging

When so much weight is reduced, it is very necessary to take precautions to prevent any sagging of the tissues. Mrs. H.'s program wisely allowed for gradual reduction of her weight and for exercise that firms and improves the contours. One unexpected result of her slimming is the disappearance of tiny, knotty veins which were beginning to show up on her legs.

She has two novel beauty tips that you may adopt. One was suggested by her doctor a few years ago and she has found it very worthwhile. She lies down for a few minutes every day with her feet elevated, relaxing completely in that upside-down position. Another she worked out for herself, and it is, she believes, a sure antidote to a dowager's hump on the nape of the neck. She sleeps with a very soft, flat pillow, turned lengthwise and placed under her back, but not under her head. She likes to sleep with her head down, not propped forward.

As you can see, Mrs. H. is a woman of courage and determination! She doesn't believe in halfway measures for herself. She says: "Sometimes when I think how much women could improve their looks by making just a little effort. It seems incredible that they are not willing to make any at all."

It is her conviction that the reducers who complain of "aches and pains and not feeling well," are mainly looking for an excuse to give up.

If You Play Piano You'll Never Lack Attention at Parties

THE GIRL who can play the piano need never worry about getting attention at a party. She may have seemed a little Miss Mouse at first but when she starts a popular tune the other girls' admirers step to her side.

Yes, you have a real social asset when you play the piano and by a simple short-cut method you can easily learn how.

Even in your first lesson you make great strides in reading music and mastering the piano keyboard.

You have a chart showing in "life-size" the part of the keyboard most used in popular music. Right with each key is the note which is its music staff symbol. When you put this chart behind the piano keyboard, you see at a glance, which key to strike for each note.

You soon are picking out simple tunes and, studying time values, you learn to put rhythm into your music—play dreamy waltzes, lively fox-trots, stirring marches.

Popular music you will find easy to play this way. Instead of playing all the notes in a piece, play the melody only with the right hand and accompany it with bass chords indicated by your music. These chords are already worked out for you and you usually find that you need only four of five different chords for one piece.

Enjoy the fun of playing the piano. Our 24-page instruction book, "A Short Cut to Piano Playing," gives you the "life-size" keyboard chart, a table of chords and the music of six favorite tunes for practice. Explains time values, flats, sharps, musical terms. Book is 8½ by 12 inches—standard music size, convenient for your piano rack.

SEND 15c IN COINS FOR OUR INSTRUCTION BOOK, "A SHORT CUT TO PIANO PLAYING," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of instruction book.

A Washable Town Suit

Perhaps you have already reached a "waterloo" with your hot weather wardrobe. Even now your sheers look hot and you think longingly of a simple, light little suit that can be tubbed for continuous freshness yet won't look too "cottony." Such a suit is the successful little junior miss one above. It is at a local shop and comes in refreshing colors with the calot (scull cap) to match. Spun rayon and cotton is the fabric and it is gayly peppered with polka dots which won't wash out. The jacket, a bit longer than usual, has a businesslike pair of pockets and an invisible closing

Mary Haworth's Mail

Pursuant to Advice, Girl Tries, but Fails, to Forget Man Who Loved and Left Her; What Next to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: You told me once, about a year ago, that I could forget someone, if I tried. Please believe me, now, when I say that I have tried—and failed. Following your advice, I keep busy, but a feeling of remorse constantly runs me down. When I say that I am ill from remembering, I mean just that. I can be happy for a matter of days, but suddenly, my mood of contentment is shattered by a feeling of dread that I cannot control

I am the college girl who told you about a man whose behavior toward me, on the campus, is so different from his attitude toward me in my home; a man who, for some reason, always shows other girls more consideration in public that he shows me. I told you how much I regretted an affair we had; and I promised it never would happen again. In your reply, you referred to him as "a spiritual moron."

Since I wrote you before, he has broken off his courtship of another girl (which lasted from September until February) and is now paying attention to a third girl. To make matters worse, he has a friend (a young man) who is always broadcasting the news about whom he is going with, how lovely she is, etc., which makes my grief much heavier to bear. Do you think that this man whom I cannot forget could be reasoned with? Is there any appeal which would touch his heart?

You know, Miss Haworth, my mother learned about our affair (my great mental weariness was the giveaway) and for days she cried. But she allowed me to go on seeing him, and I prayed that he might ask me to marry him by June, 1940. But my prayers remain unanswered. Why must I be unhappy like this? Is he to feel nothing? Please answer me quickly. CONNIE.

It Is Easier to Outgrow Than to Forget; Try It

DEAR CONNIE: Perhaps I used the nonconstructive, or negative, phrase, in urging you to "forget" the man. Perhaps I should have said—more precisely expressing what I meant—that you should OUTGROW him. Yet, whatever my words, the fact is obvious that you rejected the essence of my advice; that you have not sincerely dedicated yourself to the proposition of going on without him.

While you may have busied yourself, in surface thought and outward seeming, with projects designed to keep him out of sight and out of mind, the truth is that your emotional nature (that irresistibly powerful determinant of individual destiny) has never wavered in its abject address to him. In other words, your spirit has never turned away its face in the direction of a new dawn of happiness. You are looking backward; and like Lot's wife, you are paying the penalty of being figuratively transformed into a pillar of salt.

A scholarly man once analyzed for me the mystic significance of this scriptural allegory. He said that salt, the residue of tears, was used in this instance as a symbol of backward looking, embittered self pity, which inexorably extinguishes and entombs the spirit of him who feeds upon it. He who would escape the fate of Lot's wife must abandon, instantaneously and outright, the ashes of dead hopes and press resolutely face-forward to another beginning in better circumstances —knowing that those better circumstances will shape themselves in accordance with his dauntless faith and works.

But to return to your problem: It is evident, from the almost ominously melancholy tone of your letter that you are, indeed, "ill from remembering." Except that you are not "ill from remembering" so much as you are ill from self pity, plus self condemnation plus frustrated hope. Unless you snap out of this neurotic state pretty quickly you stand to lose something far more important to your long-term happiness than a philandering college man. You stand, in fact, to wreck your nervous health and possibly your very reason. That "feeling of remorse" which "constantly runs (you) down" should be looked into by a psychiatrist or psycho-analyst.

And your own, or your mother's common sense (if any) should have prompted you to change schools months ago, so that you would have been healthily out of reach and rumor, sight and sound of this man. Why must you be unhappy like this? Simply because you haven't thought it worthwhile to invoke a different set of emotions. You have unconsciously thought that by hanging on to the old heartbreaking desire you could eventually compel its satisfaction.

Is the man to feel nothing? Nothing, I am sure, that would add to your happiness. Is there any appeal that would touch his heart? There is none, in his present spiritually purblind, psychically insensate phase of individual evolution. Could he be reasoned with? Only, I imagine, with strong-arm tactics, applied by an outraged father or brother.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

A Woman's New York

Schiaparelli's 19-Year-Old Daugher Returns To Land of Her Birth, Eager for Career

New York, June 17.

THE BIG liners have been pouring 'em in, of late, big American names and hundreds of simple citizens glorying at being home again. Once more I've had a chance to loaf the piers, my pet lurking-ground in happier times, and among the debarking crowds from the Manhattan, not long ago, I spotted 19-year-old "Gogo" Schiaparelli, daughter of Elsa, the extraordinary designer of fashions and accessory gadgets.

ALICE HUGHES

The youngster towers no more than 5 feet, and lacks her mamma's clothes passion. Gogo dresses very simply in dark tailored clothes, and is a pleasant spectacle with her blue eyes and chestnut hair. Oddly enough, Schiap, jr., was really coming home, for she was born in Greenwich Village here while her mother, an Italian woman, was about to head for Paris and begin her career as one of fashion's foremost figures, noted alike for dress design and her novel gadget creations. But Gogo knows only of New York from the newsreels, for while the mater was making her annual trips here, the girl was busy at her studies in England and Switzerland.

In her room at the Cosmopolitan Club she has a framed photograph of a handsome French captain—from whom she hasn't heard since the gallant but hopeless defense of Dunkerque. She herself did her share of war work, as what French girl hasn't. And now she has come here to work in the local branch of her mother's business, and she says she is eager for such a career.

Schiap the elder wanted her only child away from the rush of war. And if ever the brave French nation should be driven into the sea, about the last to go would be the Paris dressmakers, still clutching their shears and basting thread.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The pulling power of a show depends a lot on your seat neighbors. The other night our chums Joe and Mary Cookman went to see Bob Sherwood's moving play, "There Shall Be No Night," with Lunt and Fontanne. But with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Mann on one side, and Dorothy Thompson and Noel Coward on the other, they found that the brilliant foursome so distracted them that the play didn't deliver its heftiest haymaker . . .

The shifting of big radio shows East and West, keeps us all distracted and agog. Fred Allen, wife Portland Hoffa and troupe left for Hollywood to make a film with Jaeques Benny, but this defection was overcome by the visit of Bob Hope, the new comic king, and his comical pair, "Brenda" and "Cobina." Wonder what Hope does with all his money? A few years back he made funny in "Roberta," the lovely show in which Tamara got fame singing "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," and Fred MacMurray was just a member of the stage band. And Myrna Loy was here. Did the boys rally round!

Tell pappy that if he wants to boost his height a couple of inches, there's a newly designed shoe with a cork ramp that does the trick. Heels are normal height, and outwardly the shoe looks as usual.

Flash—We are having the first Chinese laundry strike in our history. It's an attempt to organize the workers in the 1,500 Chinese laundries in town. As a local paper smartly heads the yarn, "No raisee, no washee."

Well, the truant officer finally caught on to where the bad little boys and girls are when they skip school. A squad of them descended on the queue outside a big Broadway movie house where a swing band was tootling, and snatched 96 truant jitterbugs right out of the line. Naughty things!

Beauty Secrets

By CAROLYN ABBOTT

How to Get Wrinkles

BEAUTY is never static. No woman guilty of scowling, frowning, tightening of the lips or talking with her eyebrows to any extreme can expect to remain a beauty for long. Mannerisms that distort the face may become so habitual that they actually mar the contours—or "freeze that way."

Never cup the chin in the palm of the hand. This movement draws the corners of the mouth into an unlovely grimace which is bad enough to look at, but it also permanently stretches the skin in this area.

Any tensing of the facial muscles is usually a sign of nerves. Learn to relax. Here's an excellent untensing massage: Lie flat on the floor, gently work a rich cream into the chin and around the mouth with the fore and middle fingers of both hands using upward movements. From the eyes to the nostrils the cream is worked in with the middle finger and thumb. Use the middle fingers in an outward-over-up movement to massage the delicate skin under the eyes, lids and over the brow to erase any fine wrinkle lines.

Artistic Touch Does Wonders For Furniture

The mythical province of Ovince put on an exhibition recently that was a more enchanting and inspiring collection of peasant wares than a real country could have trotted out. For this was a display of peasant furnishings that might have come from anywhre and could go anywhere. They included all those gayly informal things developed by people working with only their own ingenuity and the materials at hand—the results were all sorts of simple earthy types of furniture, many brightly decorated, others left plain and unassuming. Where the pioneers and the peasants left off, a young man named Peter Hunt began. And really it was his show, this exhibition from the imaginary land of Ovince.

For young Mr. Hunt would add painted carrots to a staunch and modest chair, or put painted tomatoes on a meek New England chest of drawers. He would take a wheel-barrow and make a flower cart out of it. He would take a quaint settee and use it for it for the headboard of a bed. He would take a wine barrel and make a table out of it. He would take a school desk and put it to work as a dressing table.

Fahrenheit Coolers for Summer Days

THESE hot summer days call for cool, tempting and refreshing pickups, which I heard one chap call "Fahrenheit coolers." If you can't get to your favorite soda fountain for a cool drink, you can shake up a grand drink at home by using milk as the basis and flavoring it with other ingredients. Here are a few combinations that will make delightful drinks.

Orange Quench—Combine ¾ cup milk with ¼ cup orange juice and 1 teaspoon sugar. Beat until thoroughly blended. Serve chilled. Makes 1 serving. May be varied by adding ¼ teaspoon cinnamon.

Ginger Flip—Pour ½ cup gingerale and ½ cup milk into a tall glass. Add a serving of vanilla ice cream. Serve immediately. Makes 1 large serving. Root beer may also be used.

Hawaiian Float—Combine 3 tablespoons pineapple sirup, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, 1 cup milk and a few grains salt. Beat until thoroughly blended. Serve ice cold topped with whipped cream or ice cream. Makes 1 serving.

Maple Cooler—Combine 2 tablespoons maple sirup, ¼ teaspoon vanilla, 1 cup milk and a few grains salt. Beat 1 minute. Top with whipped cream. Makes 1 serving.

Prune Flip—Beat 3 cups chilled milk into 1 cup prune pulp with rotary beater, or shake in shaker. Pour into glasses and top with whipped cream. For variety add a few gratings of lemon or orange rind.

Blitz Fever Continues To Dominate Party Whirl

Summer Lull Fails to Materialize; Venezuelan President's Wife Feted At Embassy by Charge d'Affaires

AT A TIME WHEN summer partying usually jellies down to a negligible quantity and turns the calendar completely over to brides, the whirl this season is continuing at breakneck speed.

Small and informal get-togethers all over town yesterday at luncheon time and later made many a Capitalite wonder if the crowded schedule will continue on through the season. Certainly as yet, there is no let-up in sight.

Into town yesterday came a distinguished visitor to add a special fillip of interest to the social round. Senora Lopez Contreras, wife of the President of Venezuela, arrived yesterday morning for a brief visit at the Venezuelan Embassy. Feted at a luncheon at the embassy yesterday, she will be guest of honor again today when the Venezuelan Charge d'Affaires and Senora de Fombona-Pachano entertain at a large reception at the embassy. The Venezuelan Ambassador is now in his homeland, and Senora de Escalante, chatelaine of the embassy is recuperating from an illness, so duties will be turned over completely to the Charge d'Affaires and his attractive wife.

Senora de Contreras will leave late this afternoon for New York, and will return to her homeland early next month.

While the luncheon at the Venezuelan Embassy was taking place, a number of similar parties were also under way. Senora de Butenieck, who is visiting here with her parents, the Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell, was guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Thomas Cajigas at the Shoreham Hotel.

Mrs. Richberg Fetes Helen Essary

At the same time, over at the Mayflower, Mrs. Abner Drury was entertaining at a small luncheon for Miss Mary French, of New York, and Mrs. Donald Richberg was honoring Helen Essary, the new president of the Women's National Press Club at a luncheon at the Richberg home, Hickory Hill, in Spring Valley.

Gayly informal was the latter party, at which special care was taken to keep table talk on almost any subject except the war. Something new in decorations was introduced in the centerpiece, which featured a low silver bowl filled with magnolia blossoms.

Among the guests was Mrs. Allan Reed, of Philadelphia, who is visiting Mrs. John Oliver La Gorce with whom she came to the party. Others there, in addition to Mrs. Essary, were Mrs. William A. Morgan, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Miss Mary V. Johnson, Mrs. John O. Herrick and Mrs. Bulkley Griffin.

Mrs. Grady Honored By Mrs. Waring

Still another gay party on yesterday's round was the mint julep fete given by Mrs. Frank Waring in honor of Mrs. Henry F. Grady, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, who recently returned from the West Coast.

Receiving informally at her home on Twentieth street, Mrs. Waring wore a red and white print frock, made on simple lines. Standing with her was Mrs. Grady, trimly turned out in a navy blue ensemble, and her pretty daughter, Miss Patricia Grady, who recently was graduated from the University of California. She expects to spend most of the summer in Washington.

About 40 guests called at the Waring home after 5 p. m., and lingered as long as possible to enjoy the pleasant party.

Frank Lockhart Here From China With Wife and Son

Frank P. Lockhart, counselor of the United States Embassy in Peiping, China, for the last four and a half years, is now at the Mayflower here. With him is Mrs. Lockhart and their son, Frank P. Lockhart, jr., who has just been graduated from Princeton.

Since returning to this country several weeks ago, Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart have been at their former home in Fort Worth, Tex. Mr. Lockhart was recently named Consul General and Counselor in Shanghai.

Mr., Mrs. Castles Entertain at Tea

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Sherrill and the latter's sister, Mrs. Richard Hoxie, who recently returned to Washington from Miami, Fla., were guests of honor at a tea given on Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Castles in their home in Sligo Park Hills, Md.

The hostess was assisted by her mother, Mrs. S. M. Deffinbaugh. Miss Mabel Hiatt presided at the tea table. The program for the afternoon featured several musical numbers and talks by Mrs. George Wythe, who described her recent trip to South Africa, and Dr. George Allen Wilbur, former dean of George Washington University.

Farewell Party Honors Dr. Hart

In honor of the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's Church, and Mrs. Hart, Mrs. Powell Clayton entertained at a reception last night at the Sulgrave Club.

The party was in the nature of a farewell, as Dr. Hart has accepted a call to Trinity Church, in Boston. He will not leave here until August, but Mrs. Hart will leave June 24 to Castine, Maine, for the summer.

Last night's reception was held from 8:30 to 11, and guests included a few personal friends of Mrs. Clayton as well as many members of St. John's. The hostess, who wore a long gown of gray chiffon and lace, will leave the first of next month to summer in Belfast, Me.

Mrs. Sheppard, Daughter Arrive Here Tomorrow

Mrs. Morris Sheppard and daughter, Miss Luciel Sheppard, will arrive in Washington tomorrow from Wellesley, Mass. Miss Sheppard was graduated from Wellsley College yesterday. Her mother attended the commencement.

According to present plans, Mrs. Sheppard and her daughter will leave soon for Texas, where Senator Sheppard will join them as soon as Congress adjourns.

Austin Jarvis, of Washington.

The couple were wed in the Marquand Chapel of Yale Divinity School. Miss Betty Nicholls was maid of honor for her sister. The other attendants were Mrs. Roger G. About the Town with DUDLEY HARMON

A TREND?

At the "Screamorium-Breakatorium" at the recent carnival at Wolf Trap Farm, where you could go in a booth and vent grudes by breaking things, among the targets were caricatures of various Presidential candidates. It's reported that one of Senator Arthur Vandenberg had the least objects thrown at it. Plenty, however, were hurled at a Roosevelt third term symbol.

When all the empty mint julep cups had been swept away, Mrs. Shouse discovered that her carnival had made $1,700 for the Women's Institute of Professional Relations. At another recent Washington benefit, the British Embassy garden party, $4,500 was gathered in for Bundles for Britain.

FROM THE WIFE of a cabinet member, we learned the other day that a foreign envoy may be in a quandary if he is invited to attend one of the forthcoming national conventions. To be strictly diplomatic, if he visits the Republican gathering, he must also look in on the Democratic, and vice versa. So if his friends invite him to one, he has to wangle an invitation to the other.

Dave Ingalls, the Senator's campaign manager, arrived in Philadelphia yesterday to get things going.

This is good news for Mrs. Fales, who when war broke out returned to Washington and has been living with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hyde. Mr. Fales is due for vacation before going to Japan, but getting back to Washington from Central Europe presents a problem these days.

AT THE LUNCHEON given the other day by Mrs. McCook Knox, Mrs. Harry Woodring was particularly interested in one of the many pictures in the apartment of the hostess. This is a small silhouette, dated 1830, by Edward, who was the king of silhouette cutters. Mrs. Woodring is an adept at this art.

Edward's picture shows an elegant, frock coated nineteenth century gentleman. Next to it, for contrast, Mrs. Knox has hung an Aaron Sopher etching showing a forgotten man and a closed-down factory.

Others at this luncheon were Mrs. Alan Kirk, recently returned from London, and telling the guests of her experiences there; Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Duncan Phillips, and Mrs. Edward Wilbur with her sister, Mrs. Langton Jones. The latter is the wife of a British Naval officer and has just arrived here after spending several months in Nassau.

Her French illusion tulle veil fell from a tiara of orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Frank Daniel Moncure, jr., of Washington, sister of Mr. Yourtee, was matron of honor, attired in chartreuse taffeta with a matching tulle headdress and carrying talisman roses. The brides maids were the bride's sisters, the Misses Mary Frances and Dorothy Blackburn. Their orchid gowns and veils were fashioned like those of the matron of honor and they carried delphiniums and double snapdragons.

Langdon Botler Backus, of Baltimore, was best man, and the ushers were James Ashby, jr., of Stafford, and Frank Daniel Moncure, jr., of Washington.

After the ceremony, a small reception for members of the bridal party and their families was held at the home of James Ashby. The bride's mother wore aqua chiffon with a hat of the same color, and Mrs. Yourtee had chosen a frock of hyacinth blue and white with a white straw picture hat.

The bride is a graduate of Temple Business College and has held a secretarial position with the National Education Association for the last few years. Her husband, a graduate of the University of Maryland, is a research chemist.

World Woman's Party Offices House Refugees

Swiss Soldiers Are Billeted in Cellar Of Headquarters in Geneva and Persons From Invaded Nations Live Upstairs

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

This time last year, the headquarters of the World Woman's Party in Geneva, Switzerland, was the scene of elaborate preparations for its formal opening August 18. Today it houses 20 refugees, prominent feminists from various invaded European countries, and has Swiss soldiers billeted in its basement.

Alice Paul, founder of the world organization as well as the National Woman's Party here, refused to leave when the war started. She remained, with the consent of the Swiss government, to do what she could for the cause of equal rights despite the fact that the totalitarian armies were bent on crushing rights of any kind. She welcomed to the refuge of the headquarters other feminist workers, obliged to flee their own lands as the war spread. Among those who are there now are women from Austria, Finland, Holland and the Scandinavian countries.

Every Clipper Brings a Letter

Every clipper brings a letter from Miss Paul to the headquarters of the National Woman's Party here, located in the historic Alva Belmont House. Members of the organization in this country, especially those in Washington, have been sending money to provide food for the refugees at the Villa Bartholoni.

Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest, working yesterday at the national headquarters, recalled her experience in Geneva just a year ago. She was in the midst of directing a great pageant planned as a feature of the formal opening of the villa as the home of the world organization. There were 1,000 in the spectacle and none spoke English.

As chairman of this part of the program, she went to Geneva in April, 1939, and found the 22-room house being put in condition for its new owners. The work was progressing so slowly, she knew it would not be finished by the date of the first gathering there early in June, so she moved into the one suite then habitable and kept urging the workmen to push the project. There was no furniture in the building, but the Red Cross, whose headquarters is in the same park, loaned her a bed and she bought a small gas stove on which she could prepare her meals, there being no restaurant in the vicinity.

She lived there alone for a month, until Miss Paul arrived.

Swiss Soldiers Get Blankets

Blankets with which she furnished her Red Cross bed have been turned over to the Swiss soldiers, Miss Paul said in a recent letter. The women, in addition to providing extra blankets for the troops lodged there, also serve them coffee and do what they can to make them comfortable.

Miss Paul keeps in touch with the International Labor Office in Geneva, but can do little for the cause of equal rights while war rages. She sent Mrs. Forrest back to this country last September to help with the National Women's Party campaign here for the passage of the equal rights amendment. This Mrs. Forrest plans to do by a speaking tour through the States to California this summer. She has collected sufficient funds for a car and gasoline to "feed it" and will pay her own expenses to the Coast and back. Special meetings already have been arranged for her in various cities. When she arrives in San Diego she will spend some time with her daughter, Mrs. Thomas Thornhill, wife of a naval officer.

Eleven Pi Beta Phi Members Graduate At George Washington Closing Exercises

ALUMNAE of Phi Beta Phi, as well as members of Columbia Alpha Chapter at George Washington Univeristy, were proud at last week's commencement to have 11 Pi Phi's among the graduates.

The girls were Betty Brown, Betty Bates, Betty Ann Fast, Norma Hatfield, Jean Harris, Anna Joyce David, Agnes Evans, Virginia Tehas, Virginia Lathrop, Jane Thompson and Frances Roth. Several of them plan to attend the Pi Phi convention the end of June in Pasadena, Calif.

Jane McGraw, a junior, will represent Columbia Alpha Chapter and will accompany Mrs. R. H. Pledger, who will go as delegate from the local club which has a membership of about 600. GARDEN PARTY TODAY—The first garden party and supper to be given at the new D. A. R. Chapter House will be held there this evening by the District Chapters, preceded by a card party from 2 to 4. Mrs. Sidney Jacobs has had charge of afternoon reservations, and Mrs. Ward T. Mizzell, general chairman, of those for the supper.

REAL PLAYMATE—Sydney Hessick, whose mother is honorary president of the Junior Alliance and also a member of the D. C. bar, has a playmate not nearly as old as she is but already more than twice her size. He is King, a Great Dane who, at the age of 15 months, weighs 175 pounds and gives promise of growing much larger.

King is a distinguished member of dogdom. His father was the largest Great Dane in America. One of his grandmothers was an American champion. The other was a champion on the continent.

With this ancestry the dog feels a keen responsibility for the welfare of his little mistress. It follows her wherever she goes and, when she rides her bicycle follows her as far as the corner and then stands in front of her so she cannot cross the street. At the beach it employs the same tactics to keep her from wading into the water When it is not busy looking after Sydney, it jumps into the car, and will wait there indefinitely hoping for a ride, which is its favorite outdoor sport.

CAUSE FOR PRIDE—The Congressional Club has been congratulating itself on its board this spring. Two of the members have won particular distinction, Mrs. Margaret C. Smith, of Maine, having been elected to Congress to fill the place of her late husband, and Mrs. John R. Murdock having received her doctor's degree in education from George Washington University.

BOARD ENDS SEASON—The board of directors of the Woman's Clinic, of which Mrs. Frank J. Mann is president, has closed its meetings for the summer and will not resume them until the fall when a tea is being planned in observance of the clinic's fiftieth anniversary.

The clinic is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings from 10:30 until noon.

TO CONVENTION—The Washington Chapter of Phi Chi Theta, women's professional national fraternity, is sending Miss Alice Baker president, to represent the group at the national convention to be held this year in Atlanta. Accompanying Miss Baker to the convention will be Miss Tracy Strohecker, organizer of the local group, and Mrs. Irene Malone.

Upper Marlboro to Be Scene Of Relief for France Benefit

Group Formed to Aid War Refugees Has Shipped Thousands of Pounds Of Foodstuffs and Clothing Abroad

Urgent Relief for France, a group formed to aid French war victims, for which a benefit garden party and box supper will be given this evening at His Lordship's Kindness, in Upper Marlboro, Md., has sent thousands of pounds of foodstuffs and thousands of garments to France for the refugees since it was organized in midwinter.

Last month alone, it shipped 1,302 garments and 1,463 yards of material. As the tragedy increased it redoubled its efforts to send food and clothing. In response to appeals, used clothing has been brought in great quantities and garments made by the volunteers have increased in number.

Responding to the appeal for food, at the end of May with the cooperation of merchants who enabled the committee to buy goods at lowest possible prices, it was able to send 800 cases of condensed milk, 300 cases of pork and beans, 500 pounds of rice, 2,200 pounds of cocoa, quantities of split peas and dried fruits, 2,000 pounds of sugar and 2,000 cakes of soap.

It is hoped to raise more money for condensed milk for the refugee children through the picnic supper this evening. It was postponed from yesterday because of rain.

Lieut. and Mrs. Thomas E. Dunham have donated their estate for the affair and there will be a conducted tour of the house, one of America's finest examples of early Georgian architecture. Tables will be set in the gardens for the guests who will bring their own box suppers. The donation charge is $1.

18 Senior Girl Scout Mariners To Sail Aboard Four-Master

First of 14 Cruises in Chesapeake Bay To Begin Thursday on Schooner; Young Sailors to Work on Shipboard

Eighteen Senior Girl Scout Mariners and three adult Skippers, all from the District and area, will sail from the yacht club at the foot of Duke of Gloucester street, Annapolis, Thursday afternoon aboard the four-masted schooner, William J. Stanford, for a 10-day cruise through Chesapeake Bay.

This will be the first and largest of 14 similar cruises which Girl Scout Mariners will make from Atlantic and Pacific coast ports, from Portland to Seattle, aboard a variety of vessels during the summer months. Mrs. Wilson Brown, wife of Admiral Brown, superintendent of the Naval Academy, will be the honor guest at a short ceremony just before sailing.

Local Girl Scout officials emphasize the fact that this is not a luxury cruise. The girls actually will do all the work aboard ship except to prepare the meals. They will holystone the deck and haul up the sails, learn how to handle the wheel, ropes and sails, and how to chart a course and navigate. They will stand regular watches and will practice knots, splicing and bagewrinkle. When the schooner is at anchor they will learn how to handle small craft, including sail boats. Instruction will be given by Capt. Edward Kelly, master of the schooner. Swimming will be under the supervision of Miss Shirley Kains, of Arlington, Va., a Red Cross life saving instructor.

In preparation for the cruise, the girls have studied the compass, rules of the water, principles and terms of sailing, and the use of charts and tide and current tables.

The cruise itinerary includes visits ashore to places of historical interest. Among them will be a tour of the Naval Academy before they cast off, a visit to the State House in St. Mary's City, the Chesapeake Bay marine laboratory at Solomon's Island, and the Marine Museum at Newport News. On the return trip they will put in again at Solomon's Island to pick up stores and then sail for Baltimore, returning to Annapolis the evening of June 30 or the morning of July 1, depending upon the wind and weather.

The director of the cruise will be Mrs. Rebecca Spitler, of 1200 Mohawk Lane, Bethesda, Md., who has been in charge for four previous seasons. Assisting her will be Mrs. Grace Cameron and Mrs. Frances Cahen, Arlington.

The 18 girls who will compose the crew are members of two "ships" (troops) in the District, the "Constellation" and the "Vandelia." Mrs. Spitler is skipper of the former and Mrs. Cameron is mate. The girls from this ship will be: Kitty Holman and Ann McDermott, of Alexandria; Frances Schaaff, Tommy Brunner, Honora Mattare, Dorothy Webster, Alice Olin, Elizabeth Hendricks, Jackie White, and Nancy Wakeman, all of Washington.

The girls from the ship "Vandelia," of which Mrs. Cohen is mate, will be: Susan Cornelia, Joyce Kephart, and Emilie Martinsky, of Washington; Jane Cole, Hyattsville, Md.; Nancy Nicolet, Riverdale, Md.; Phyllis Crotzer, Nancy Jacobson, and Mary Mathes, of Washington.

During the cruise, contact will be made each night with the District Girl Scout headquarters for the convenience of parents wishing to send messages to their daughters.

During the 1938 cruise the Girl Scout Mariners were credited with saving the lives of two men who had fallen into the water from a fishing boat. The keen-eyed lookouts spotted one of the men after they had been in the water all night. After a two-hour search the second man was found and rescued.

'The Whole Street Seemed to Rock...'

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

AIRVIEW OF THE SECTION IN QUEENS, LONG ISLAND, WHERE DOUGLAS BOMBERS FELL AFTER MIDAIR CRASH. WRECKAGE OF THE PLANES (A AND B) WAS STREWN THROUGH THE STREETS. HOUSES (1 AND 2) WERE SMASHED AND SET AFIRE BY THE FLAMING RUINS OF PLANE (A). RADIO OPERATOR (PROBABLY OF PLANE B) PLUNGED THROUGH ROOF OF HOUSE (C)

Accounts given by witnesses to the crash of two Douglas B-18 bombers that plummeted 2,500 feet into a New York City residential section, in the borough of Queens, after colliding yesterday in midair:

"It was a tremendous noise, said George Noll, who heard the crash and ran out of his home. "The whole street seemed to rock. The two houses across the way were smashed."

The planes were part of a group flying in V formation when one ship attempted to cross over another during a change of formation their wings locked together.

Plunging earthward in flames, the pilot of one ship apparently struggled to avoid a row of newly built one-family houses, and managed to crash in the street. Wreckage of the planes was scattered over a wide area. Firemen extinguished several blazes.

Bodies of the victims, all severely burned and mangled, were placed in Army ambulances and returned to Mitchel Field.

F. W. Watkins, whose home was within 50 yards of the scene of the crash, was sitting in his living room when the planes came down.

"I ran outside immediately, and two houses directly across the street, which were hit by wreckage, were already blazing fiercely. It seemed only a few minutes before rescue squads arrived and the bodies were being dragged from the wreckage. At short intervals there were explosions which sounded as though small bombs were going off.

"Luckily there were no children playing in the street at the time."

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, who flew an Army bomber during the World War, arrived shortly after the crash. He said:

"This is one of the inevitable accidents of training."

Capital News In Brief

Mothers Club to Meet

The Mothers Club of the Boys Club of Washington will hold its last meeting for the summer at the Eastern Branch, Seventeenth street and Massachusetts avenue southeast, tonight at 8 o'clock. Miss Helen Richards, of the Juvenile Court, will be the guest speaker.

Be Honest, Benedicts

Giving the wrong answers when applying for a marriage license may well stand the offender a prison term, the United States Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

Justice Justin Miller discussed the criminality of misleading the license clerk in an opinion upholding the two to four-year sentence imposed on William F. Robinson, 39, colored.

Robinson gave his name as Alfonso P. Mattison and said he had not married before, although, in fact, he had two previous wives. The first was dead. He was separated from the second and contends his marriage to her was void.

Play Is Too Rough

Three youngsters were treated at Washington hospitals yesterday for head injuries inflicted by playmates.

Reginald William, 8, of 212 G street northeast, was admitted to Casualty Hospital in undetermined condition after he was struck with a baseball bat near his home.

Eugene Franklin, 11, of 1923 Thirty-fifth street northwest, who was struck by a stone, and William Winder, 7, of 1213 Bank street northwest, who was struck by a horseshoe, were treated at Georgetown Hospital and sent home.

Bill Provides Extra Pay In Shipyards

Civilian Workers Would Get Time And Half for Labor Over 40 Hours

Civilian employes in navy yards and on naval stations would be paid time-and-half for work over 40 hours weekly under terms of the House bill to expedite shipbuilding as rewritten in the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. The new bill was reported yesterday by Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, committee chairman.

Walsh explained last night the bill was revised to bring employes and contractors on Navy emergency building under the same provisions as those working for the Army.

The committee's bill provides also that the Navy's civilian employes entitled to leave may be employed at double pay in the leave period. Retired civil service employes could be rehired when their services as specialists were deemed necessary and any civilian employe of the Army, Navy or Coast Guard could be dismissed summarily if his employment were held dangerous to the national security. No manufacturer could employ aliens on confidential projects without express permission of the Government.

The Navy would be empowered to employ additional personnel and "to use funds appropriated with or without competitive bidding to operate and maintain plants authorized by the act, either by Government personnel or through the agency of qualified commercial manufacturers." Government-owned facilities could be included in private plants and private plant expansion.

Meanwhile, a plea that all positions created under the National defense program be filled by qualified former service men was heard by National Defense Post, National Association of Regulars, meeting at the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club. John Arthur Shaw, former National director of the Veterans Employment Service, Department of Labor, was speaker.

Officer Hurt, Man Jailed In Argument

Shots Fired in Chase After CCC Enrollees, Colored Pair Clash

An argument between two CCC enrollees and two colored men last night set off a chain of events near Ninth and M streets northwest that sent a policeman to the hospital and one of the colored men to jail.

Three shots were fired by Traffic Policeman Horace W. Carmichael in a spirited chase of the prisoner, who finally surrendered after twice slipping from the grasp of pursuing officers.

Telephone Police

Police reconstruct the affair as follows:

The CCC boys, after an argument with the colored men on M street, between Ninth and Tenth, fled into a restaurant at 901 M street and telephoned police that two colored men with knives were guarding the exit.

When Motorcycle Policemen Carmichael and Anthony Kaskeski arrived, the colored men were running down M street, after one of them had entered the restaurant and allegedly attacked one of the CCC enrollees with a beer bottle.

Kaskeski ran down one of the fleeing pair with his motorcycle but was unable to hold him. Carmichael gave chase on foot and pursued the man four blocks into a residence in 1100 block Tenth street northwest.

Chase Leads Upstairs

The race led up one flight of stairs, where the fugitive jumped from a dark corner and shoved the policeman back down the steps.

Despite a badly cut hand that necessitated three stitches later at Emergency Hospital, Carmichael resumed the chase down the back steps and through alleys, where he fired three shots after the fleeing man. Exhausted, the fugitive finally gave himself up and was led to the police call box.

Trial of 2 in Killing Of Sirkis Is Begun

Lathan Daniel, 23, and John D. Butler, 27, both colored, went on trial for first degree murder before Justice F. Dickinson Letts of the District Court yesterday.

The men are accused of killing Herman Sirkis, 42, in holding up a liquor store at 4824 Deane avenue northeast on February 26 this year. They were indicted May 14, police declaring they signed statements admitting the holdup.

An all-male jury was selected just before court adjourned yesterday, after six hours questioning had used up three panels of jurors.

Shaky Dodgers Bow to Cards, 3-1, Lose Lead

Four Costly Errors Beat Brooklyn

St. Louis Hangs Up Fifth Straight as Flock Bobbles Ball All Over the Lot

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, June 17.—Still shell-shocked from the going over given them Sunday by the Cincinnati Reds, the Brooklyn Dodgers made four costly errors today and dropped a 3-1 decision to the St. Louis Cardinals that also meant the loss of first place in the National League, as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Philadelphia Phillies, 6-2, to go on top.

It was the fifth straight triumph for the Cards, who haven't been beaten since Billy Southworth assumed the managership last week. Clyde Shoun, the former workhorse relief pitcher, started the game and went the full distance for the first time since 1938, allowing just four singles.

Errors Beat Dodgers

Two of these and a double play gave the Dodgers their only run in the first inning.

Vito Tamulis and Newt Kimball, who worked the ninth inning after Tamulis was removed for a pinch hitter, hurled good ball and allowed seven hits, all of them singles except a harmless two-bagger by Mickey Owen.

A Weird Fourth

St. Louis got its other two runs in a weird fourth inning which Koy opened by reaching first on Cookie Lavagetto's error and stealing second. He went to third on a fly by Pepper Martin. Terry Moore popped up, but Joe Orengo singled Koy home. Then he stole second and went on to third when Babe Phelps threw into centerfield, and raced home on a single by Martin Marion.

Reds Regain Lead, Beating Phillies, 6-2

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 17.—The Cincinnati Reds jumped back into first place in the National League today by beating the Phillies, 6 to 2, while Brooklyn bowed to St. Louis, 3 to 1.

The Dodgers and Reds were virtually tied in games standing before today's play but Brooklyn had a lead in percentage because they have played fewer games.

First-rate pitching by Lloyd Moore and a home run by Eddie Joost with two on in the second inning enabled the Reds to hand the Phils their sixth straight defeat.

Moore replaced Johnny Vander Meer on the mound in the second after the first two men up walked, and allowed only two hits in the full eight innings he pitched. It was his second victory of the season—both against the Phils.

Walter Beck went all the way for the Phils. The two Cincinnati pitchers gave up eight bases on balls, six of them in the first three innings, but the Phils got only three hits.

Morrie Arnovich made one of his two hits productive of a Cincinnati run in the first and Joost's homer accounted for three more in the second. The other runs came in the eighth and ninth.

Pacific Coast Trackmen Rout Big Ten All-Star Team, 96-40

By the Associated Press

Evanston, Ill., June 17.—The Pacific Coast Conference, putting on a superb show of individual brilliance and team strength, handed the Western Conference all-star track team a crushing defeat tonight in Northwestern University's Dyche Stadium.

The West Coast athletes piled up a total of 96 points to 40 for the big ten before a scant crowd of 5,000 spectators, sweeping all three places in five events and establishing two of the four new meet records.

Pat Turner of U. C. L. A. set a new mark in the broad jump, leaping 25 feet, 6⅜ inches to break the record of 25 feet, 2 inches set in

Two "angels" and two of the current wrestling glamour boys have been signed up for Promoter Joe Turner's "last stand show" Thursday night in his W street arena.

The Irish Angel will meet Karol Krauser, Polish glamour lad, in the semifinal, and none other than the Swedish Angel, peer of all Jock Pfeffer's freakish groan artists, will waltz with Gino Martinello, Boston pretty boy, in the grand finale. In a special 30-minute number, Matros Kirilenko and Felix Slovikowski will step off.

California And Cornell Are Threats

Poughkeepsie Race Gets Away at 4 P. M. On Hudson; Distance Of Event Is 4 Miles

By the Associated Press

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 17.—The University of Washington varsity crew maintained the Hudson River status quo tonight by continuing as betting choice on the eve of the forty-third regatta of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association.

The Huskies or the University of California have dominated the betting in this four-mile classic on an average of four times out of five through the last 15 years. Rarely have they let their supporters down.

When Washington ties up to its stake boat some time around 4 p. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow afternoon, its sophomore-stroked boatload is expected to be the 7-5 favorite. Lined up next to the Huskies in the outside, or far eastern lane, will be California, record-breaking winner a year ago and this time joint second choice with Cornell at 2 to 1.

Columbia Rated 4-1

Columbia will be 4 to 1, Syracuse 5 to 1, Navy, last winner for the East in 1938, 8 to 1, and Wisconsin and Princeton fellow underdogs at 20 to 1.

Washington, two-lengths winner over California in April, has gained its preeminence in spite of familiar pessimism on the part of Coach Al Ulbrickson. Complaining first about the fact he didn't have time enough to work his men on the Hudson itself—they've been rowing intermittently since last fall—Gloomy Al today predicted the whole fleet would have a tough time getting started on time tomorrow.

"Don't know why they moved up those times," he grumbled. If there's any wind at all, the river'll be lumpiest right about then. If there isn't any wind and the sun's out, then that'll be the hottest part of the day."

Crews Are Ready

The Weather Bureau, not caring a whit for the fact that old grads will be streaming into town from all over tomorrow, didn't help much. The forecast was "partly cloudy and warmer, with light showers"—which, particularly the showers, means typical regatta weather.

The crews went out for final paddles today. Tomorrow morning a group of destroyers, with the Annapolis second classmen aboard, will anchor near the finish line. Shortly after noon, the more fortunate spectators will climb aboard a 13-car observation train.

Nats Try Night Life Tonight Against Indians

By Shirley Povich.

Post Staff Writer

Cleveland, June 17.—The Nats, Who have not been doing so well in the sunshine league, will try their luck in the American League night life tomorrow evening. They will make their maiden effort of 1940 under the arc lights in vast Cleveland Municipal Stadium against the Indians.

Manager Bucky Harris has been reserving Dutch Leonard with this nocturnal engagement in view, on the suspicion that Leonard's knuckle ball will be at its dipsy-doodle best in the kilowatt league. Leonard's knuckler completely bamboozled the Chicago White Sox, not to say discombooberated 'em, in the only night game he pitched last year.

The Nats aren't very happy at this time. It seems that they will take a four-game losing streak into Cleveland Stadium tomorrow, and it has fetched them in last place. All of a sudden the greatest run-producing team in the league (the Nats were that, honest), became mired in a miserable hitting slump in the first three games of the late and lamented series against the Tigers.

They made only two runs in the

Dodger Infielder Ready to Tag Card at Second—P. S. He Forgot the Ball

Brooklyn's Second Baseman Pete Coscarat is all set to tag out the sliding Cardinal infielder, Joe Orengo (18), but he apparently forgets that he let Catcher Babe Phelps' throw get by him. Joe made it safely to second in the fourth inning of yesterday's game which the Cards won, 3 to 1

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, June 17.—So the remorseful little lambkins who play for the Cleveland Club don't want Manager Oscar Vitt fired after all. At least that's what they said in a signed statement withdrawing their charges against Vitt which ranged all the way from one complaint that he is mismanaging the team to another that "he is driving us nuts."

POVICH

But don't you believe that all is now milk and honey between Manager Vitt and his darlings who said they didn't mean what they said. They backed down because the heat was on. It is significant that just before the peace-making, Owner Alva Bradley talked to the boys. Until that point they were sticking by their complaint against Manager Vitt. But baseball players don't argue with club owners.

The whole business looks suspiciously like a strategic retreat by the Indians who suddenly discovered that they had whipped up an awful fuss and were making themselves, as well as Bradley and Vitt, laughing stocks in the funniest baseball episode in the 40 years of American League history. If they really wanted Vitt fired a retreat at this point was perhaps the proper maneuver.

When it was apparent that Bradley would stick by his manager, the players knew their game was up. At least for the time being. While the heat was on, Bradley wouldn't fire Vitt, that was certain. He couldn't afford to lose that much face. But sometime later, perhaps, when the episode had cooled, and it didn't look like a blackjacking process, Bradley might be impelled to fire Vitt.

Certainly it is incredible that overnight the players decided that they had tabbed Vitt all wrong; that he was a nice fellow and a good manager. Their withdrawal of "all statements referring to the resignation of Vitt," can scarcely fool anybody. The die was cast when they trooped into Bradley's office with their original complaint last week. A whole gang of ball players and a manager don't kiss and make up just out of pure magnanimity.

The suspicion is that Vitt's number is up. A manager who doesn't command the respect of his ball players is always on a hot spot, more particularly when the fact becomes widely publicized. Managers have been fired on less excuse. Bradley will have fulfilled his duty if he keeps Vitt to the end of the season. Beyond that, he is no longer beholden to Vitt, and may feel constrained to please his ball players as the primary move in assembling a winning club.

Seemingly, the only possible way for Vitt to hold his job is to win the pennant with the Indians. The players had complained that he was spoiling their chances for the pennant, you remember. If he can win it despite the defection on his club. Then it would be a truly heroic feat and Bradley would have to recognize the fact that in Vitt he has come up with a surpassing kind of manager.

All of this department's sympathies in L'Affair Vitt is with the Cleveland manager. He has the Indians within a chip-shot of the lead. He has been no failure. There have been sub-rosa rumblings on many ball clubs against their managers. But Vitt is the first to be the subject of an open mutiny. You have to sort of admire him for refusing to resign. He decided to fight for his job, and you can't blame a guy for that. And there are reasons for belief that he has been very much wronged. To start with, it was no sweet-tempered gang of players that came under his management. Cleveland teams have been habitually manager-baiters. On one occasion during Walter Johnson's regime, the club felt impelled to buy space in the newspapers so that it could publish a signed statement by the Cleveland players affirming their loyalty to Johnson. Only in Cleveland did a club ever have to publish a paid advertisement to set at rest such rumblings.

That Cyril Slapnicka, general manager of the Indians, was hostile to Vitt has been no secret. Paradoxically, Slapnicka hired Vitt as manager. But on the Cleveland club there have been reports of an "Iowa gang" comprised of Slapnicka, who lives in Cedar Rapids; Hal Trosky, who lives in Norway, and Bob Feller, who hails from Iowa. If Slapnicka knew of the impending charges against Vitt, in which Trosky and Feller were ringleaders, apparently he did nothing to restrain them. In a symposium of opinion culled from Cleveland fans by an enterprising newspaper after the "fire Vitt" story broke, one fan calmly suggested that "fire Slapnicka" would be the proper course.

Mr. Bradley is the long-suffering figure in the case, however. He thought he had in Vitt just the tonic for his Cleveland ball club. He dismissed Roger Peckinpaugh in midseason because he was told Peckinpaugh did not have the necessary spark or inspiration as a manager. He hired Walter Johnson in an attempt to bring harmony to the club, and fired Johnson because he wanted a more belligerent leader. He gave the job to Steve O'Neill, and fired O'Neill because he proved too easy going.

Then he heard about Vitt, who had led the Newark club to a pennant and who had a reputation as a veritable magpie on the coaching lines and in the dug-out. Vitt was all dash and pep, and Bradley liked him, only to discover that his ball players got mad at Vitt for popping off too much. For Bradley there has been no escape.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 17.—In measuring the effect of the war (or what's left of it) on sports it appears tennis will be chief sufferer. There has been an almost complete blackout of the game this season, and unless a flop-haired California kid named Welby Van Horn comes through, the American end of the sport is in for the worst era in its modern history.

The Davis Cup matches, of course, are out. We wonder if they'll ever be revived, though they came back bigger and better than ever after a five-year lapse during the World War. The swastika flies over the Stade Roland Garros, near Paris, where much of the recent history of the tennis racket was knit. Wimbleton is deserted, dark and forgotten. Last week was the week when the Queens Club Tournament was always held as a kind of preview of the big Wimbledon Tournament. It wasn't held.

CONSIDINE

This time a year ago 20-odd nations were playing for that big silver bird-bath put up in 1900 by Dwight Davis. Smacking an unshaven rubber ball back and forth over a net probably is a lot of energetic nonsense, but it was a lot better than the thing most of those nations are doing today.

One of the purposes of the Davis Cup was to create good-fellowship among nations. That is the underlying reason for all international sport. The trouble is that most of the blokes who stir up the bloodletting which wets down the earth every generation never played a game of any kind in their horrid lives, and thus aren't familiar with the few simple rules of sportsmanship which could avert the world's boundless woes.

This week was to see the opening of Wimbledon. It has been 10 or 15 years since Wimbleton stopped calling itself the "world's grass-court championship," but it was still tops. It not only got a big, strong and varied field of competitors, but it was played in a setting which made it the goal of every player who ever played the tournament end of the game. It was the theater on whose stage the names of Tilden, Johnston, Lacoste, Cochet, Perry, Budge, Lenglen, Moody were forever entwined with the lore of the sport.

There is a sameness to tennis which creates terrific boredom for the spectators unless there is a constant and colorful turnover of the competitors. That's why pro tennis can last only one year—one swing around the country by a specific troupe—unless it is supplied with new and important faces from the amateur game.

The amateur game, on the other hand, depends a lot on getting foreign players to keep it alive. They won't be here this year. The greatest crowds Forest Hills ever had were not attracted by clashes between two native sons. They were attracted by such finals as Tilden vs. Lacoste, Vines vs. Cochet, Budge vs. Perry, and Budge vs. Von Cramm. Last year the Australians packed them in.

The U. S. L. T. A. will drop untold thousands of dollars in revenue this year, which will affect tennis all over the country—for the association sends all of its net profits back to member clubs to spend on developing players. The lone white hope is this kind Van Horn, who isn't much like his musical comedy name.

Mrs. Stokes Wins District Women's Medal by Five Strokes

Manor Star Shoots 78 At Kenwood

Mrs. Kreuzburg, Mrs. Harrington Tie For Second With 83s; Mrs. Pray in Play-Off

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Middle Atlantic champion from Manor, Mrs. Walter R. Stokes, placed a bid for the District Women's championship yesterday at Kenwood, when she completely outclassed a record field by winning medal honors with five shots to spare.

Mrs. Stokes played each nine in 39 strokes for a 78, by far the most consistent shotmaking of the day. Scores soared away above expectations and the 90s played off for the championship flight, enabling one of the pre-tournament favorites, Mrs. L. G. Pray, to barely make the grade via the playoff route.

Defending champion Mrs. Leo Walper, the host club hope; Mrs. Betty Meckley, Mrs. Myron Davy, Congressional, and Mrs. Bishop Hill, Chevy Chase, all prominent contenders, are scattered through the first flight with scores from 84 to 87.

Two Tie at 83

The second spot among the qualifying scores was filled by Mrs. Richard Kreuzburg, of Kenwood, and Mrs. J. F. Harrington, Capital, who deadlocked with 83's. Mrs. Kreuzburg deserted golf for school teaching from last September until two weeks ago and was well satisfied with her 43-40. Playing the tougher back nine first she missed a short putt on the eighteenth for a 39 and came back in 43. Mrs. Harrington's previous best this season was a 91 but she finished the first nine in 4-3-4 and started back 4-4 as she played the course in 42-41.

Seven scores at even 90 tied for last place in the championship flight, necessitating a seven-way playoff for three places. However, Mrs. C. P. Medley, Indian Spring, and Mrs. H. A. Knox, Congressional, left the course and five, Mrs. Landra Platt, Chevy Chase; Mrs. Pray, Manor; Mrs. Woodlief Thomas, Kenwood; Mrs. J. W. Godfrey, Congressional, and Mrs. J. F. Gross, Columbia, battled for the three berths.

Drops 25-footer

Mrs. Pray dropped a 25-footer on the first hole for one place and Mrs. Godfrey clinched hers on the second with a five. Mrs. Thomas chipped close for a par four on the third extra hole to win the third place over Mrs. Pratt, who was trapped. Mrs. Gross lost out on the first hole by three-putting. Mrs. Platt qualified with an odd back nine, eight 5's and a birdie two on the seventeenth.

The luck of the draw tossed five of the six outstanding players into the upper half of the championship flight. In a first-round match today that should befit the finals, Mrs. Walper and Mrs. Davy meet at 10:05 Mrs. Stokes, Mrs. Meckley and Mrs. Hill are also in the upper half. Mrs. Stokes against the last playoff winner, Mrs. Thomas.

Third best score of the day was 84, another tie between Mrs. Hill, who started with a pair of 6's but despite that was out in 42 and back in the same, and Mrs. Meckley. The latter was out in 40 with all fours and fives and back in 44 with all fours and sixes.

Miss Houghton Has 85

Miss Houghton, a former Maryland State finalist, was alone at 85 and Mrs. J. C. Dale, of the host club that qualified six of the first 16 players, posted the only 86. Mrs. Walper and Mrs. Davy were each 87, Mrs. Davy hitting trouble on the

Wise Boys Pick Godoy, Fight Odds Lowered

Eddie Mead, Jimmy Johnston Predict Chilean Will Upset Louis; Broadway Bettors Laying 1-5; Fight to Gross More Than $150,000

By the Associated Press

New York, June 17.—Some of our boxing minds looked into the crystal ball over their ham and eggs today and predicted, in apparent seriousness, that Arturo Godoy would take the heavyweight championship away from Joe Louis in Yankee Stadium Thursday night.

Immediately, for no better reason, the betting odds were shaved somewhat by Broadway bookmakers to 1 to 5, whic his plenty short.

Even a set of hungry bloodhounds couldn't ferret out the reason. Admittedly Godoy is as strong as he was when he dropped a split decision to Louis last February, and he's trained so fine he will do no more boxing.

But Louis, when last heard from, was still the same dusky dynamiter, and there's nothing in the deck—even with deuces wild—which would figure to give Godoy more than an outside chance.

Yet, fellows whose opinions rate something along cauliflower causeway, men like large Eddie Mead and Liverpool Jimmy Johnston—predict the former Chilean fisherboy is going to mean anything but a pleasant evening for Louis. Mead is positive the heavyweight crown is going to take a boat ride to South America, basing his statement—a lot of his listeners called it a pipe dream—on the observation that Joe seems to have trained "for a short fight."

Since Joe's handlers have been conditioning him for tussles both long and short, it doesn't seem they're going to overlook any bets now. Particularly since there was nothing short about the first trip to the post against Godoy and his crouch. Then, too, you can't forget Louis has taken about $1,100,000 out of the heavyweight championship—part of the $2,000,000 or so in purses he's collected since he first put gloves on his two cannon.

Bloodworth Sent Home to Recover From Injured Arm

Cleveland, June 17.—On the advice of a Cleveland physician, Manager Bucky Harris today sent Second Baseman Jimmy Bloodworth to Washington, where he will await recovery of an injured throwing arm.

Simultaneously Harris announced that Jimmy Pofahl will play second base for the Nats tomorrow night against the Indians. Pofahl, who came to the Nats as a shortstop, is being offered a chance to make a steady job for himself at second base. Pofohl has not played second since his high school days.

An examination of Bloodworth's injury today revealed that he was suffering from a blood clot above the elbow, induced by a spike wound. Bloodworth was spiked making a double play in Washington last week and has since been out of the Nats' line-up.

Frank Parker, Defending Champion, Heads Advance in National Tourney by Beating Groucho Marx's Son; McNeill, Grant Score

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 17.—Frank Parker breezed through the first round of the National Clay Court Tennis Tournament today by demonstrating the skill he hoped would win him the title for the second year in a row and the third time in his career.

Parker, seeded No. 2 behind Robert Riggs, singles champion of the United States and England, bowled over Arthur Marx, of Beverly Hills, Calif., son of the comedian, Groucho, 6—3, 6—1, 6—3. Marx was unable to match the variety of strokes displayed by his fellow Californian.

Other seeded players, with the exception of Frank Kovacs, Oakland, Calif., seeded No. 8, also made short work of their first round opponents. Kovacs failed to appear for his match with Ted Schroeder, Glendale, Calif.

Don McNeill, Oklahoma City, seeded No. 4, defeated Edward Aloo, of Berkeley, Calif., 6—2, 6—4, 3—6, 6—1. Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, Ga., seeded No. 5, defeated Robert Harmon, Berkeley, Calif., 6—3, 6—3, 8—6. Gardner Mulloy, Coral Gables, Fla., seeded No. 6, defeated Charles Shostrom, Chicago, 6—4, 6—4, 6—2, and Henry Prusoff, Seattle, Wash., seeded No. 7, defeated Matt Chandler, Kalamazoo, Mich., 6—0, 6—3, 6—3.

The other two seeded players, Riggs and Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, won their first round matches yesterday.

In the women's singles, Alice Marble, Beverely Hills, Calif., advanced to the third round by trouncing Mrs. Edna Shalala, Cleveland, 6—3, 6—1, in the only second round match played. Survivors of the first round included Mary Hardwick and Nina Brown, of England, and Gracyn Wheeler, Santa Monica, Calif. All won in straight sets.

Use of Ineligible Players Costs Hahn Franchise

President Vic Gauzza, of the National City Sunday Baseball League, yesterday announced that the Hahn Rovers had been disqualified from further league play as a result of the use of four ineligible players against Plaza Tile nine Sunday.

Managed by Don Moore, the Hahn club had lost five straight games before defeating Plaza, 7-5, and was in last place in the standings. The four players in question entered the game under names of eligible players.

Gauzza's comment was: "The team was probably tired of losing, wanted to win one way or another. The underhand method, however, left only one thing for me to do. From now on B Section, in which Hahn was entered, will function with only eight teams."

By the Associated Press

Red Wrack Captures Elk Garden Handicap at Charles Town

Irish Moon Beaten Out By a Length

Winner Pays a $7.60 Ticket; Nears Track Record; Caidon Runs Third in Feature

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., June 17.—Red Wrack made his record for this meeting two victories and two seconds today while carrying the colors of Mrs. M. Knierein home in front of seven others in the Elk Garden Handicap. The son of By-Pass II and the only 3-year-old in the field turned back W. R. Roberts' Irish Moon by a length and finished three additional lengths in advance of Jayne Waugh's Caidon.

Red Wrack was red hot in the mutuel department before the races and paid $7.60. Much money was wasted on a dull effort by Mrs. H. Horst's Consistent, which was losing for the first time in five starts. Consistent not only failed to do any serious running, but came over on horses leaving the gate and eliminated Royal Marriage, Schley Goree and Little Harpist.

Red Wrack, beaten recently by Caidon, turned in time of 1:19 3-5, only two-fifths of a second over the track record of the 6½-furlong course held by Royal Cross. Jockey John Hernandez rode today's winner.

Caidon and Swift Air battled for the lead in the early stages, while Red Wrack was being steadied along. Caidon finally shook off Swift Air and opened a good lead, but Red Wrack suddenly turned "Man o' War." The gelding galloped around horses, breezed by Caidon and then went up to open much daylight. Irish Moon rallied in the stretch, but was held safe.

Jockey Buddy Root rode a brilliant race to get C. B. Phillips' Gay Prank home ahead of sprint company in the first race. The filly hooked up in a duel with Osofree that lasted most of the way with Gay Prank taking the decision. She returned $6.40 to her backers.

There was a $55.40 mutuel awaiting those who coupled Cats Cradle and Ace of Trumps in the daily double. Jockey Sammy Palumbo had the mount on Cats Cradle and pushed the old mare along to down Lady Buck and Romney Royal. She paid $13.20. Jockey Bob Bernhardt took the third race by a length and a half from Way Out with Gay Jack third in a field of eight.

Kid-McDowell Fight Tonight

Weather Puts Stadium Bout Back 1 Day

Were to Meet Last Night; Kid 7-to-5 Favorite; Both Predict Knockouts

Threatening weather yesterday caused postponement of the Cocoa Kid-Wild Bill Mcowell fight in Griffith Stadium until tonight, but Cocoa and the curly-haired Texan found time to "mix it up" anyway—verbally.

The two top-ranking welterweights will fight it out in 10 rounds or less, with Cocoa, No. 1 title contender, a 7 to 5 favorite.

At weighting-in ceremonies in District Boxing Commission offices and over the air afterward, however, Wild Bill was leading his own cheering section with promises "I'm going to knock that guy out."

Cocoa Kid was whooping it up for the Cocoa Kid in similar manner and took advantage of the one-day delay to hold a "surprise" workout at Turner's arena.

Both in Top Shape

Both boys appeared in top condition at the weighing in, and McDowell was trained down to his finest weight since he first invaded Washington. Cocoa weighed 147¾ pounds, and McDowell, 149½.

Interviewed over a local radio station after the session at the commission, both fighters expressed confidence they could defeat Welterweight Champion Henry Armstrong. Promoter Joe Turner has offered Armstrong a $10,000 guarantee to meet the winner of tonight's battle and is awaiting word from Fat Eddie Mead, Hank's manager.

"I feel that after winning five matches here I shouldn't have any trouble with this guy," McDowell proclaimed over the air.

On the other side of the microphone, Cocoa Kid scowled and responded:

"When a man is in the ring I let him have everything I have, but outside the ring I treat him like a gentleman."

The chocolate - colored Puerto Rican then let flow a brief speech in Spanish and then announced he was confident he could defeat Armstrong, hereupon McDowell volunteered that he felt that he not only could knock out the Cocoa Kid but could beat Armstrong, too.

Beat Furr Twice

Wild Bill will have to show more than the clowning tactics he sometimes resorted to in his two victories over Phil Furr here if he's going to beat the No. 1 contender.

Cocoa has 41 straight victories to his credit and is not only a skilled ring stylist but packs dangerous punches in either hand. McDowell, however, is a difficult target and has an educated left hand that is certain to worry the Puerto Rican. Wild Bill has a quaint habit of shooting a right uppercut that also may upset Cocoa.

Bill, now in the eighth position among the first ten welters, will be gunning for Cocoa's No. 1 spot.

Reservations made for last night's battle will be held intact for tonight, and a crowd of some 5,000 is expected to be on hand for Washington's first mixed match.

Preliminaries opening at 8:30 p. m. bring out in six-rounders Billy Banks vs. Joe Sole, Early Ward vs. Frank Rosano, and Jack Flowers vs. Floyd Grayson, and Ray Landis vs. Dominic Nicco in a four.

HAILEY.

Furr Referees Cocoa Kid-McDowell Verbal Battle

When rain forced postponement of yesterday's scheduled Cocoa Kid-Bill McDowell fight until tonight at the ball park, the two principals resorted to verbal battles. Here's Cocoa (left) and McDowell (right) telling Furr "I'm the guy." Furr appears in a bit of a quandary. This meeting of the two came after the weighing-in yesterday at District Boxing Commission offices first three games of that series, and in the final game when they managed to rush seven runs across the plate, they were likewise beaten. But in that last game there was some teensy ray of hope for Harris. His club did get ten hits.

The chief culprit in the Nats' descent to the cellar aside from their woeful pitching display, has been Gerald Walker, who went 12 times to bat without a hit until the final game of Detroit. But Walker's slump was excusable. He has been agonized by a sinus attack which at one point was so severe that all went black before his eyes.

Johnny Welaj has seemingly flopped miserably. He stirred up only one hit in the Detroit series and that was a luck-anointed Texas Leaguer. George Case has now supplanted Welaj as a fixture in the Nats' outfield, and Sammy West will get Welaj's job against right-handed pitching.

Jimmy Bloodworth is still complaining of the spike wound in his throwing arm, and will visit a specialist in Cleveland. Meanwhile Buddy Myer has breached the gap in the infield defense, but he is contributing little to the Nats' attacking power, and second base is still a worrisome item with Harris.

When the deadline on league trades fell on Saturday night without a single deal being made by the Nats, Harris resigned himself to his current material. "I don't know where it's all going to end," he said, "but we can play better ball than we've been playing. I haven't given up on either Sidney Hudson or Walter Masterson. They'll win for us if we can get a few runs for them."

Wheat Rallies, Regains 4 of 7-Cent Break

All Grain Deliveries Set Seasonal Lows On French Shock

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 17.—Chicago grain prices absorbed the shock of French government's capitulation today to close with net losses of as much as 3 cents a bushel in wheat after recovering more than 4 cents from the extreme setbacks of the day.

Traders said the French action was not a complete surprise and that its effect had been at least partly anticipated. Helping also to rally the market from the extreme lows was announcement of Government purchases of 461,000 barrels of white flour for relief distribution.

Corn prices dropped 2½ cents, rye was off 3½ and oats and soy beans were about a cent lower at times. All deliveries of wheat, December corn, oats and rye sold at new lows for the season.

The price breaks were the first since the removal last Friday of pegged minimum levels which had been in effect for almost a month. At the close prices ranged from fractions to about a cent below these minimum figures. At the extreme decline July wheat sold for 74 cents a bushel, or 4 cents below the "pegged" price, and almost 40 cents lower than the peak reached last April when the Germans began their westward invasion.

Wheat closed 2½@3 cents lower than Saturday, July, 77⅜@77¼; September, 77⅛@77¾, after having sold off as much as 6¾ cents earlier in the session. Corn was ¾@1⅛ cents off, July, 60¾@60⅞; September, 59⅜@59½; oats, ¾ to ⅞ down; rye, 1½ to 1¾ lower, and lard 10 to 12 lower.

Wheat at Winnipeg dropped to the minimum pegged price of 71⅛ but later recovered slightly. At Minneapolis, prices were off at times as much at 7½ cents a bushel and at Kansas City losses extended to 5½ cents, but later rallied.

Douglas Aircraft Has 18,000 at Work

New York, June 17 (AP).—More than 18,000 men and women are employed in Douglas Aircraft Co.'s Santa Monica and El Segundo, Calif., plants as the result of addition of 1,000 skilled workers during the past month, Donald W. Douglas, president, said today.

Machinists ,tool designers and diemakers are principally in demand as hiring continues, Douglas added.

Current backlog of orders exceeds $140,000,000, of which nearly $23,000,000 represents orders for commercial "skyliners" for United States use. Backlog a month ago was around $117,000,000.

Rayon yarn deliveries for the first five months this year were the highest on record for a like period in the industry's history, the Rayon Organon reports.

Exchange Market

New York, June 17 (AP).—The French franc vanished from the world's money market today as a result of the capitulation of France to Germany.

At the same time the free British pound dropped 4 cents in relation to the dollar.

Trade in the franc virtually ceased in the local market last week as the result of war dislocations. Today the Bank of England suspended dealings in Paris exchange.

Elimination of the franc, and the avowed British plan to drive the free pound into extinction within a few weeks, will leave the foreign money market with just one international money which is reasonably free from the official restrictions—the Swiss franc.

The current market in the free pound, as in the Canadian dollar, is free in a very limited sense. There is no limit to purchasing either unit but the uses to which they may be put have narrowed to a point where prices are made on sales involving only a few thousand dollars. In the old days blocks of $1,000,000 were not unusual.

The Swiss franc advanced .01 of a cent. The Canadian dollar hailed temporary improvement with a drop of 1 cent to 80⅛ U. S. cents.

Closing rates follow (Great Britain in dollars, others in cents.)

Official Canadian control board rates for United States dollars: Buying 10 per cent premium, selling 11 per cent premium, equivalent to discounts on Canadian dollars in New York of buying 9.91 per cent, selling 9.09 per cent.

Canadian dollar in New York open market 19⅛ per cent discount, or 80.12½ U. S. cents.

War Spread Fails to Cut May Exports

Increased U. S. Trade With Italy, Canada, Latin America Noted

By the Associated Press

The Commerce Department estimated yesterday that May merchandise exports from the United States to other countries totaled $317,000,000, about the same as in April, despite the spread of war fronts.

Although exports to Denmark, Norway, Russia, Belgium and the Netherlands dropped sharply, these export losses were made up by increased sales to Italy, Canada, Latin America and Asia.

Although the United Kingdom and France have been the two largest purchasers of American goods, their purchases also dropped from $98,000,000 to $86,000,000 in May.

Many shifts in commodities also were noted. Compared with April, shipments of cotton, wheat, fruits and machinery, declined, while exports of tobacco, coal and airplanes increased.

The estimate was based on preliminary figures of exports only. Corrected export and initial import figures for May will not be ready for a few weeks.

Steel Operations Reach New Peak Since December

New York, June 17 (AP).—American steel mills are operating this week at the fastest rate since last December—27.7 per cent of capacity—the American Iron Steel Institute estimated today.

The new production rate is 3.1 points higher than last week and compares with 73 per cent of capacity a month ago and 55 per cent a year ago.

In the week of December 18, last year, production was at 90 per cent of capacity, a rate which has not since been approached.

Reich, Italian Bonds Stage Abrupt Rise

Spectacular Spurts Range to 19¾ Points; French Liens Slump

By the Associated Press

New York, June 17.—Bonds of Germany and Italy, both public and private, soared spectacularly in today's market in the wake of the French plea for an armistice.

Some of the outstanding gains, registered on heavy turnover in some cases were: Italy 7s, up 12¾ at 58; Rome 6½s, up 8 at 46; Milan 6½, up 11½ at 41½; Italian Public Utility 7s, up 11⅞ at 38½; German 7s, up 5¾ at 25; Adriatic Electric 7s, up 19¾ at 59¾, and Lombard Electric 7s, up 17 at 45¼. There were numerous others benefitting from the swift developments favoring the Rome-Berlin axis, including rises in bonds of countries occupied by German troops.

No transaction occurred in French bonds but the government 7½s were reported offered at 20 points below the last sale at 75. Losses of 2 to 5 points were shown by some of the British dominions, including Australia and Canada.

Among home issues the trend was mixed at the close, although final prices were well up from the lows of the day established in an early sell off. Lower by fractions to a point or more were Bethlehem Steel 2½s, Santa Fe 4s, Delaware & Hudson 4s and Portland General Electric 4½s. International Telephone 5s bounded up 5⅛ to 29¼. Others ending higher included Puerto Rican American Tobacco 6s and Commonwealth Edison 3½s.

United States Governments were strong all day and finished with gains of 5-32 to more than a full point in the majority.

Private Insurance Firms Seen Aided By U. S. Program

There is no conflict of interest between the private insurance companies and the Government's insurance program, according to Fowler V. Harper, general counsel of the Federal Security Agency. Mr. Harper addressed a session last night of the Chartered Life Underwriters of Washington and Baltimore in the Cosmos Club.

On the contrary, Mr. Harper said, the Social Security program has made it easier for insurance companies to sell policies.

"Any influence that teaches people the habit of paying premiums over a long period of time, and teaches them the advantage of so doing," Mr. Harper said, "will make it easier to sell them insurance policies."

"Moreover, if they lose their jobs and have unemployment insurance benefits coming in, they are less likely to let their individual policies lapse, at least so long as their unemployment benefits continue."

79% Accept New Treasury Notes

Secretary Morgenthau announced yesterday that holders of $279,334,900 of $352,993,450 Treasury bonds which came due Saturday had accepted an offer of new securities instead of cash.

The new securities were 1 per cent, 3¼-year Treasury notes. The maturing bonds were 3% per cent, 12-year bonds.

Treasury officials said the approximately 79 per cent acceptance of the exchange offer was about the same as in previous years when the Treasury refunded bond issues were widely held.

Bank Loans Gain Slightly in Week

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday commercial, industrial and agricultural loans of banks gained slightly last week.

In 101 cities, these loans increased $9,000,000 to a total of $4,377,000,000. They gained $12,000,000 in New York City alone, but this was offset slightly in some other business centers.

Credit Sales Up 3.9%; Collections Improve

St. Louis, June 16 (AP).—The National Retail Credit Association reported today better employment conditions brought improvement in collections, credit and total sales to 30 cities during May compared with the same month a year ago.

Collections increased 2.2 per cent, credit sales 3.9 per cent and total sales 4.7 per cent, the association said. A total of 9,491 stores in the United States and Canada was represented in the monthly analysis.

Stocks Show Surprising Equanimity at News Of French Bow; Prices Slump $1 to $3, Recover Strongly, Close Little Changed

New York, June 17.—The capitulation of France knocked prices down 1 to 3 points in early dealings on the stock exchange today but the surprising feature of the day was the recuperative powers of values in later dealings and the ability of the present market to take such world-shaking developments more or less in its stride. The list was higher in the third hour than it was at the opening and while it lost a portion of its comeback the close was not bad.

The composite average showed a loss of 0.19 point, which is next to nothing when one considers it happened on the day France was forced to bow to the greater power of Germany.

Surrender Discounted

There were other finahical repercussions which were more noteworthy, but taking them all together it must be said that the news was received with relative equanimity. Explanations are varied. They include the possibility that France's capitulation was expected and therefore discounted in advance, much the same as Italy's entrance into the war a week ago had exerted its full influence on prices well before the final act became official.

There was also the factor of the expectation of profits, no matter what turn the war has taken, because of the vital necessity of this country building up its defenses.

Reelection Odds Cut

A third factor mentioned by some in the financial district today was that the present situation alters somewhat the possibility of the President being successful in his expected fight for a third term. One Wall Street man declared that previous odds on the President's reelection had been cut suddenly. With the war brought so close to us, the belief is spreading that the President himself must assume the responsibility for our present unprepared situation, particularly in view of the money that has been squandered during his Administration.

No Trade in Francs

The foreign exchange market received the news of the French capitulation calmly. Dealings in this field are now at their lowest ebb of many years. Trading had been suspended in French francs late last week after Paris fell and there was naturally no resumption of dealings today.

Free sterling, in which the market is growing thinner steadily, ranged from a high of $3.68 to a low of $3.61¼ and closed 3 cents net lower at $3.65. Canadian dollars closed at a discount of 19¾ per cent.

Textile Officials Weigh U. S. Plan To Aid Refugees

Danville, Va., June 17 (AP).—A proposal that 1,000,000 bales of Government-owned and stored cotton be distributed among American manufacturers for conversion into clothing for refugees in war-torn Europe was discussed here over the week-end by textile officials, it was learned today.

S. C. Lamport, New York textile exporter, exploring the proposal with George S. Harris, president of the Riverside & Dan River Cotton Mills, said that the next few months would see "between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000 refugees in Europe whose clothing will present a problem which can be resolved only by the enormous capacity for production in this country."

Lamport said the plan had the backing of the Administration and that the cost of converting the raw cotton into clothing would be paid by cotton certificates. He added that the project would act as a great stimulus in the field of domestic manufacture.

Cotton List Cracks, Then Recovers

New York, June 17 (AP).—Cotton futures cracked nearly 40 points in fast response to French capitulation early today, but started a comeback that left the close 18 to 25 lower.

Pressure subsided after midday and short covering in July and price fixing attracted by the lower levels stimulated prices.

The rally was motivated by belated consideration of the United States defense program, which experts said would go far to eliminate lost sales in export markets.

London—News of 12s French capitulation resulted in new losses in the securities market today, but trade came almost to a standstill. Bargain hunting developed in several sections of the list, but most traders waited for full results of the French move.

Severe declines were scored for many industrials and pronounced weakness appeared in mining stocks. Prices for British government bonds were made on the basis of a one-point spread between bid and asked quotations.

Liverpool—Cotton futures lost sharp early gains and plunged to the permissible minimum limits today on reports of a French peace move. Final prices were unchanged to 6 points lower.

Arms Program Offsets Loss of French Trade

New Blow to Exports Deemed Not Vital By Street Analysts

By the Associated Press

New York, June 17.—Wall street experts said today the capitulation of France to Germany presumably meant another blow to American foreign trade, but the effect upon American industry would doubtless be lost sight of in the huge domestic arms spending program.

American exports to France in 1939 amounted to $181,625,000, which was 5¾ per cent of all exports from this country.

Total American exports to the rest of the world in 1939, however, amounted to only 4.6 per cent of this country's national income, and with industry already beginning to feel the stimulus of the $5,000,000,000 American armament program, business analysts said the French loss did not appear vital.

British to Expand Buying

At the same time, it was understood the British purchasing commission was preparing to take over all of the French portion of the $1,600,000,000 in war orders placed here by the Allies since September.

The gradual squeezing off of American trade with Europe, as the Reich has successively occupied Denmark, Norway and the Low Countries, and Italy has come under the British blockade, has seriously cut into normal overseas sales of this country, particularly of agricultural products.

Some Wall street sources pointed out, however, that of total American exports of $3,177,000,000 in 1939, only about 40 per cent went to Europe, and of the total to Europe, well over a third went to England.

Under the stimulus of war purchases, and filling neutral markets formerly supplied by belligerents, American exports have lately been running at the rate of about $4,000,000,000 annually.

Farm Outlook Bright

Some analysts saw a prospect that agricultural products might eventually be needed in large volume in Europe, as food supplies are used up. How Europe would be able to make payment, it was said, was a problem still to be solved.

The United States now has about 70 per cent of the known monetary gold supply of the world. The total in this country now exceeds $20,000,000,000, of which about $1,270,000,00 in being held for the account of French central banks. A part of this is presumably held for the Bank of France.

The French had at the outbreak of the war monetary gold reserves of about $3,000,000,000, and at least a fair portion of that is believed to have been moved out of the country.

France has not been a large investor in American securities, having held $185,000,000 worth at the start of the war. Part of this may already have been liquidated.

Texas Parley Called To Close Oil Fields

Austin, Tex., June 17 (AP).—An emergency State-wide oil hearing tomorrow was called today by Railroad Commissioner Jerry Sadler.

"It is my belief that a complete State-wide oil production shutdown is imminent due to the fact there now is no export market at all for American crude," Sadler said.

"We are calling this meeting to prevent possible waste of oil.

"It is my information that all French tankers have been turned back.

"England has been taking much of its oil from French refineries.

"When there is no sale for the oil we have exported, it is time for us to act."

Sadler said the hearing was called after a conference with Commission Chairman Lon A. Smith.

Listen! with Slocum

The prospect of saying a few kind words about WJSV, a task usually tackled with relish and gleaming eyes, seems faintly lewd these days. In fact, I rather envy my fathers who picked up the evening papers, swore gently at the atrocities of those "Huns" and went quietly to bed, serene in the thought that there wasn't much that could be done about things until tomorrow's paper justified further outbreaks of parlor profanity.

It takes, too much will power to switch off a radio these evenings. And once the networks call it a day there is a slight respite, then more news. Yesterday morning I got quite a kick out of one of the news shows. It was Cecil Brown's talk from London, and I thought Mr. Brown's courage was extraordinary if all the things they say about European censorship are true.

I remember Mr. Brown when he worked for the Columbia Broadcasting System's publicity department. Cecil worked the overnight shift, a shift that required no great talent other than staying awake and he didn't work it very well. I don't know whether his problem was keeping awake or not, but eventually he parted company with C. B. S., saying plaintively as he left that "I'm too young to be a night watchman."

At the time of his departure Mr. Brown was uncommonly solvent and left for Europe. In Europe he got a job with the International News Service's Rome office and has beed doing exceedingly well. He is a good broadcaster, although the Brown lisp comes over more clearly via radio than via ordinary conversation.

C. B. S. scored quite a scoop, yesterday. Midway through one of its morning serials a German voice was heard announcing that Mussolini would aid Hitler in the business of making the peace with France. The broadcast was picked up from Hitler's headquarters in the field.

C. B. S. maintains a staff in New York that does nothing but listen to foreign broadcasts which are picked up by special equipment.

"Orphans in Love"

By Marion White

Chapter 43

"I KNOW, my dear. It isn't the sort of wedding you planned. But if it will set his mind at rest, nothing else matters. You'd never forgive yourself, dear if——"

"No, no, of course not." All the life had gone out of her voice. She turned aside, stared dully across the river. Married immediately, to Peter!

Millicent scarcely heard her. The world was spinning about her, falling into little pieces.

The stars were shaken out of their orbit, they crashed to earth and mingled with the lights of the bridge across the river; they all whirled in blinding spots before her eyes. Married to Peter, when she had just discovered her heart belonged to Ken!

She spun about suddenly. Her voice quivered with a strange, intense force. "Mother, tell me the truth. Is there some special reason for this?"

Cora glimpsed the tragedy in her eyes; her mouth opened in a vague consternation. "Why . . . Why . . ." She wondered if she dared tell her the truth, and knew, as she stared into those wide, troubled eyes, that she could never summon the courage. "Only that your father wants to see you settled, dear," she finished lamely.

Millicent caught at this straw. "Then it doesn't necessarily have to be Peter? So long as I'm married."

Cora Gasps

"What? What are you saying, Millicent." Cora grasped the parapet to steady herself.

"I'll be married, mother. Right away." The words tumbled out, one after another, in a great urgency. "But I've been such a fool. I don't love Peter. I never did. That's the truth, mother. I've loved Ken for years. You realize that, don't you?

"I only wanted to be engaged to Peter . . . for spite, I guess. I don't think I ever truly meant to marry him. And now Ken's back. He's come back to me, mother, and I'll never let him go again. I'll call him. We'll be married. Tonight, if that's what father wants. I'll explain to Peter later . . . Oh, mother, don't you see? Don't you—Mother, what's the matter? Tell me, what's wrong."

For even in the darkness, she saw the change which had come over her mother's face, the terror-stricken look which dilated her eyes. And she swayed on her feet, dizzily, and would have fallen, if Millicent had not put out her arms to her.

"Come, I'll help you inside . . ."

"No. No. Wait. Listen to me, Millicent." She straightened herself with a supreme effort; she clutched the girl's arm fiercely, so that her nails pressed into the flesh, even through the heavy material of her coat.

Engaged to Peter

"You don't know what you're saying child. You're engaged to Peter. You promised——"

"But I was out of my mind, mother. I must have been. I didn't realize, not until Ken came back."

"What does it matter? He means nothing to you. Believe me, Millicent, I'm sure. He comes back with some sort of Oriental glamour, some heroic attributes, and you think you love him. You don't, do you hear me? You can't! Have you forgotten what you told me? You hate him! You wanted to flaunt your wedding ring in his face. Well, now you can do that. Tonight . . . tomorrow . . ."

Wrought Up

Millicent stared at her aghast. Never had she seen her mother so wrought up. Never had she seen her so closely on the verge of hysteria. The fact bewildered her, until she realized the ordeal her mother had gone through, these past few days.

She shook her head slowly. Her voice was very gentle. "I was wrong, mother. I was a fool then. Can't you see that I was only trying to be vicious? Besides, what does it matter? I'll be married, if father wants it. But why Peter?"

Her mother took a long, deep breath: she spoke with a deep, burning intensity. "Because your father has set his mind on this marriage, Millicent. You cannot cross him now. You cannot argue with him. Any least excitement, the doctor said . . . You cannot let him down at this moment. He's never refused you, Millicent. Never. You've got to marry Peter, to set his mind at peace. I don't care what you do after that, but you've got to marry him immediately!"

Cooper came into the living room silently. He spoke in a solemn, hushed tone which he had probably assumed for this occasion of sorrow.

"I can't reach Mr. Storm," he announced. "I've been phoning him every 15 minutes, as you instructed."

Cora stopped her nervous pacing up and down the room. "Keep on phoning, Cooper. All night, if you have to. And send a telegram, too, in case there may be something wrong with the telephone. Tell Mr. Storm to come here as soon as possible, no matter what time it is."

"Very well, madam."

Millicent sat in the tall chair beside the fireplace. She twisted her handkerchief nervously with both hands. Occasionally she would glance toward the clock.

She was going to marry Peter. Dr. Parker was on his way to the house. Perhaps in another hour, another two hours, she would be Peter's wife, once and for always. He would never agree to a divorce. She was sure of that.

There was nothing to do about it. Her mother was right, undeniably. She owed her father this much. If it was his wish—his last wish—perhaps . . . well, she'd go through with it as graciously as she could. She'd be good to Peter. Heaven knows, she couldn't blame him for this.

Her mother came over and stood beside her chair. Her eyes were still dim. "My poor child! I don't know what to do. I want you to be happy——"

Millicent reached up, patted her hand. "I will be, mother. Trust me for that. And Peter's all right. I was crazy about him just a week ago. Then——"

Forces Smile

She forced a smile. "It looks as if I'm the irresponsible sort that's ready to jump on any band wagon, doesn't it? Maybe father's right. He probably knows I'd be vacillating this way and that for the rest of my life . . . Peter Storm today . . . Kenneth Hall tomorrow . . . the King of Siam the next——"

Her mother was not fooled. She recalled a dozen incidents which she had passed over lightly. Incidents which any mother should have recognized immediately. She remembered the change which had come over Millicent when Kenneth went away, the days when she had scarcely touched her dinner.

The time she had finished an entire bottle of champagne, to prove how little she cared. The hysterical outburst that night at the Grahams, when they showed motion pictures of their trip to India.

Of course she was in love with Kenneth. How could her own mother not realize the truth of that?

And now what was to be done about it? Must she sacrifice her daughter for her husband's peace of mind? After all, they had lived their lives. They had taken their own happiness.

Paces Room

She stood up, began pacing the room again. She walked from one end to the other, back and forth, from the fireplace, where her daughter sat so quietly and resignedly, to the door of the bedroom, where her husband lay in semi-conscious suspense. Which one, she asked herself. Which one must I serve? Is there no way out?

She stopped abruptly. Her hand flew to her throat in quick excitement. No way out, she thought. Is there no way out?

A few moments ago, when she spoke to Dr. Parker over the telephone, he had been uncertain.

"There are so many new regulations, Mrs. Abbott. About the license, I mean. I am not sure that the ceremony will be quite regular, even if you secure the special license."

"I am not sure that the ceremony will be quite regular."

To Be Continued.

Billion-Dollar Bill Is 'Only a Preview,' Senators Declare

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

The billion-dollar emergency tax bill is only a "preview" of the revenue measures that will be necessary for national defense, a Republican and a Democrat predicted in the Senate yesterday.

Criticizing the bill as inadequate to meet the Administration's deficit spending, Senator Vandenberg warned that "the American people must have no illusions—this bill is but a preview of the taxes they will have to pay."

And later in the day—after the Senate had voted approval of most of the committee changes in the House bill—Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, shouted that "we haven't even begun to tighten our belts."

He suggested the title of the measure be amended to call it "Tax Bill No. 1."

Offering amendments to raise an additional $400,000,000 annually Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, declared that the present bill, designed to raise $1,007,000,000 a year for the next five years, failed to meet the average annual deficit even for nondefense expenditures of the Government.

He pointed out that during the past 10 years, the Government's deficit has averaged $2,700,000,000, of which $1,600,000,000 was for nonmilitary purposes.

Senator Tydings proposed to lower the income tax exemption for married persons from $2,000 now in the bill to $1,600; to start the surtax at $2,500 instead of $4,000 and to make the lowest surtax rate 5 per cent instead of 4 per cent.

The committee amendments approved by the Senate yesterday included revision and an increase in amusement taxes, increase in the tax on rectified spirits, and removal of a proposed boost in tobacco excises.

The 33 1-3 per cent increase in the levy on rectified spirits caused a lively debate among Senators from States containing large distilleries. The amendment was approved by a vote of 47 to 25.

The Senate will consider today the Townsend amendment halting purchase of foreign silver and the Byrd amendment cutting Federal non-defense expenditures by 10 per cent.

An attempt to add an excess-profits tax to the bill will be made by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin.

Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of the People's Lobby, wrote Senators yesterday that the proposed tax bill weighs too heavily on low-income groups. He urged that the full cost of this year's defense needs be met in one year—instead of five—through higher taxes on personal incomes and excess and normal profits and a tax on "land speculation."

Annenberg to Face Sentence in 10 Days

Chicago, June 17 (AP).—Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson announced today that M. L. Annenberg, the Philadelphia publisher, who pleaded guilty to a charge of evading $1,217,296 in income taxes, would be setnenced on June 27 or 28.

Annenberg is faced with a maximum punishment of five years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine.

Tokyo Thrust Against French In Asia Likely

Nationalists Reported Urging Japan to Seize Possessions in Orient

By the United Press

Shanghai (Tuesday), June 18.—Reports circulated here today that extreme nationalists in Japan are bringing great pressure to bear on the cabinet to take advantage of France's defeat by Germany to forward Japan's "southward expansion policy."

There is an increasing demand in Tokyo, according to the reports, that Japan move to obtain French possessions in Asia and overthrow of the Yonai cabinet is possible if the premier continues what the ultra-nationalists consider to be his "weak-kneed pro-British policy."

Diplomats here were attempting to confirm other reports that Japan is concentrating 100,000 men on Hainan Island, which commands the sea approaches to Indo-China.

Cable to Duce Reported

Shanghai, June 17.—Two news items today aroused great disquietude in the American and Allied circles of Shanghai as well as elsewhere in China and the Far East, as indicating the possibility that Japan is taking a more active part in the general world wide conflagration.

The most sinister item was a cable from Rome reporting that Premier Mussolini had received a cablegram from Japan's war minister, Gen. Hatta, and Field Marshal Prince Kanin, chief of the Japanese imperial general staff, saying the senders wished "from the bottom of our hearts that the Italian armed forces, loyal to their glorious tradition, may win most overwhelming and grandiose victories."

This cable from Japan's military heads, sent without the signatures of the Premier and other heads of government, was interpreted here to mean that the Japanese army was again undertaking to dictate national policies.

The second disturbing item came from Canton, where a military spokesman, reportedly, independently undertook to give a blunt warning to French Indo-China that if arms and supplies shipments to China do not cease and if Indo-China "refuses, then the Japanese army must undertake to wean Indo-China away from her hostile attitude toward Japan."

It is feared here that if the French armies actually capitulate, Japan will probably make an abrupt move against unprotected French Indo-China, even before moving against the Netherlands East Indies.

"Great Concern" Cited

Tokyo, June 17 (AP).—The newspaper Nichi Nichi asserted today the Japanese government was "greatly concerned" by the situation in which Far Eastern colonies "are almost without control from their mainlands" as a result of Allied defeats in Europe.

Observers predicted Japan would take an increased interest in the French possessions of Indo-China and New Caledonia.

Yakichiro, Suma, foreign office spokesman, said Indo-China had received considerable governmental attention although there have been no special conferences concerning it.

Nichi Nichi said Japan would oppose alleged efforts to place Indo-China under the joint provisional management of the United States, Great Britain and France, a project of which Suma said he had no report.

Utility Pleads U. S. Defense In Reply to SEC

Electric Bond & Share Asks Commission To Drop Its Order

A new problem in regulation of business—a problem born of war abroad—faced the Government yesterday when Electric Bond & Share Co. asked the Securities Commission because of "national defense" to drop its order against the company to simplify its capital structure.

"The urgent demands on the staffs of respondents and their subsidiaries with problems concerning the national defense" were given by Electric Bond & Share as a reason why the proceedings should be dropped. The company's interests cover the country and extend to 13 foreign lands.

"It is of vital concern that operating companies in the system prepare themselves for all foreseeable eventualities," the utility company wrote, promising that its subsidiaries would cooperate "in connection with the national preparadness program or any other national emergency which may eventuate."

Cars Must Be Tested

SEC officials said the plea of national defense would have to be tested and, if the company won the test, many Government regulating agencies might be faced with a major problem.

Meanwhile, the SEC moved to simplify its own procedure when it invited the utilities industry to confer on June 27 on new rules that would eliminate an estimated 80 per cent of formal hearings now required.

The proposed rules would cut out hearings, now required, when a utility company wants to sell a vacant lot, borrow money, sell securities, pay dividends, or transfer assets and funds among subsidiaries. The proposed legulations, aimed to slice through red tape, would allow such plans to be approved automatically after a waiting period of perhaps 30 days, if in the meantime no objection were filed.

Answer Is Filed

Electric Bond & Share, one of nine utility holding companies served with "integration" orders by the SEC, also filed its answer yesterday under the "death sentence" clause of the law.

The holding company challenged legality of SEC's procedure in requiring it to integrate geographically and financially. Earlier, the firm had challenged legality of the "death sentence" clause and had filed applications for postponement of hearings, which were denied.

Expanding on reasons why corporate simplification should not be pressed at this time, Electric Bond & Share stated:

"Due to the present World War, financial and money markets are in an unsettled and disturbed condition; several sales of securities have already been postponed and the issuance of any order under section 11 (B) (2) which might necessitate financing or require or make desirable the sale or distribution of stocks or other securities at this time, would entail great loss to investors and might not be possible of accomplishment, nor would it be in the interest of investors, consumers or the public."
